Child

"As young as the kids are, they pick up on things very easily and know more than you think they do," she said.

Pickering said the center is better in structuring children's activities than other child-care centers.

"I like the way they handle the kids," she said. "They just don't let them play like at other centers. They actually have planned activities for them."

Donna Maranville, a kindergarten teacher at the center, stressed the benefits of incorporating university students into the kindergarten program and into other programs at the center. "Most of them are very dedicated, and they have lots of enthusiasm," she said. "You just don't see that at other centers."

Students benefit by gaining valuable experience and by having a place to work, Maranville said. And, she said, the location of the center is fairly close to campus.

Although parental fees and university funding keeps the program running, Maranville said the center does not have a lot of materials to work with.

"The university just doesn't have that kind of money," she said.

However, the enthusiasm of the teachers, UNL students, and children make the funding shortages just a little easier to take, she said.

Midwest

"The rationale for any major organization to be located on the coast was to be near commerce and big banks," Hallett said.

However, progress made in telecommunications and fiber optics in recent years has had a tremendous impact on the manner in which business is transacted, Hallett said.

"One can now conduct one's business from anywhere," he said.

● The cost of living in the Midwest is lower than that on the coasts, prompting many firms to relocate, Hallett said.

● Many people are moving to the Midwest in search of a better quality of life.

Hallett painted a rosy picture for the future of the Midwest region.

"It will dominate the demographic growth of people and the economic growth of the nation for the next 20 years," he said.

A study released by Arizona State University in recent weeks found that Nebraska experienced the highest percentage of job growth in the nation last year. Between June 1990 and June 1991, Nebraska had an increase of 4.73 percent, or 34,000 jobs.

The city of Omaha also ranked second in the nation in terms of the percentage of job growth last year, according to the study. Nebraska's largest city experienced a growth of 5.16 percent, 17,000 new jobs.

Larry Routh, director of Career Planning and Placement at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, attributed Nebraska's job growth in part to the fact that Nebraska was not affected by the slump in defense contract work, which has hit some state economies.

He also said that agribusiness, much of which is based in Nebraska, is experiencing relatively good times.

Despite the job increase, Routh was quick to put the numbers in perspective.

"While there is job growth here, it isn't an open market," he said. "There are a lot of people that want to be here (in Nebraska). It's still very competitive."

Recent activity in UNL's Career Planning and Placement office appears to support Hallett's claims on the movement to the Midwest. Routh said UNL graduates who live in coastal cities have called his office and are interested in moving back to Nebraska.

Most of those requesting information cited the state's quality of life and educational system as incentives for returning, Routh said.
