

OCR All-Nighter set

By David Moyer
Staff Reporter

The Office of Campus Recreation will put on its third-annual All-Nighter Friday.

Beginning at 4 p.m., students can enjoy an evening away from drinking while participating in various activities.

"It was started to provide an alternative to going out to the bars," said Sally Pfeiffer, coordinator of the night's activities. "It is something social for the students to do while staying on campus."

At 4 p.m., three-on-three basketball, racquetball and badminton tournaments will begin. The evening will have various family activities from 6-8 p.m., and then again later in the evening. At 8 p.m., students can participate in events such as a TV marathon, racquetball and a slam dunk contest.

Pfeiffer said this year the event is hoping to attract about 3,000 people, a step up from last year.

"We more than doubled our numbers from the first to the second year," she said. "We hope to do it again this year."

Participants who win an event will receive an All-Nighter T-shirt as a prize.

Activities will continue into the night, ending about 4 a.m. on Saturday morning.

Students need not register in advance. They just have to show up at the door Friday, Pfeiffer said.

Bostick

against someone you're up on by 30 points.

"We've held back a lot. By no means have we used all of our plays."

Bostick said he is not feeling any added pressure this week, even though he is playing the home-state team.

"I want to win the Big Eight and go to the Orange Bowl," he said. "Whether or not we beat Washington doesn't determine that."

If the Huskers win the game, Bostick said, he is not going to rub things in immediately.

"I don't think they'd take kindly to me calling home right away," he said. "They have really big fans back there just like we do here."

Bostick said even if the two teams weren't playing, he is still good about not saying too much.

"When I go home I'm usually nice because I might have to live there again someday," Bostick said. "I don't go around saying how good Nebraska football is."

Batting

Well, some batting race proponents claim that it keeps the season interesting for fans whose teams have dropped out of the race.

For example, the Reds' Hal Morris and the Cardinals' Felix Jose are playing for teams which have all but been eliminated, yet they still have to play nearly 20 games.

The question that naturally follows that argument is that if these people were real baseball fans, wouldn't they be following their teams regardless of the won-loss records? After all, Harry Caray doesn't hang up his microphone until the Cubs leave the field in October.

Other fans say that hitting is a pure statistic, the mark of a real baseball player. The batting race, they conclude, is an accurate representation of the best players in the sport.

But over the years, some players have shown their true colors once they see a batting crown on the horizon.

Take the Royals' thirtysomething George Brett. Last season, Brett was looking to become the first player to win a batting title in three different decades.

Brett, who owned a slim lead, was battling Oakland's Rickey Henderson in the final weeks of the race. It was a cat-and-mouse deal, but Brett opted not to play in several of the Royals' last games.

Henderson kept swinging, but was unable to get hits or catch Brett, who won the title and the hearts of thousands of middle-aged men across the country.

The history books will say nothing about Brett sitting out, just that he won the title. He earned it, yes, but he earned it by sitting when it counted.

Not exactly what Abner Doubleday had in mind.

And try this: Last year, Willie McGee (now of the San Francisco Giants) won the National League batting title as a member of the American League's Oakland Athletics. McGee was traded late in the season, but he had enough National League at-bats to win the title.

He didn't even play in a National League park in September. So pardon me if I don't follow Franco's statistics in the paper every day.

Sue me if Fred Hickman's nightly reports on Hal Morris don't send chills up my spine.

The real races are those played on the field for 162 games by nine players instead of one. The real races are decided in April, not by a few crappy swings in October. And the real baseball players are the ones who play to win a World Series ring, not to be at the top of a statistical column.

That's the real story.

Nebraska volleyball team drops one spot in poll after loss

The Nebraska volleyball team dropped from fourth to fifth on the American Volleyball Coaches Association Poll released Tuesday, following a loss to UCLA this weekend.

Despite falling to UCLA 12-15, 15-10, 15-10, 17-15, the Huskers held their position at seventh on the Volleyball Monthly magazine rankings released Monday.

Stanford is No. 1, followed by Hawaii, UCLA and Pacific in both polls. The Cornhuskers also trail Louisiana State and Long Beach

State in the Volleyball Monthly poll.

This weekend the 7-1 Huskers will face No. 9 Brigham Young and No. 11 New Mexico State in the BYU/Mizuno Invitational. Nebraska is the only Big Eight school to enter the Top 20 this season.
