an understanding about why things are a certain way," she said.

The club has benefited everyone involved, giving students a better understanding of the black experience and its impact on non-blacks, Gines said.

"Our present feelings have a lot to do about what went on in the past," she said. "Those things come to light when the poems are read."

Gines said she believed the club not only demonstrated the talent students had, but also strengthened and unified the students involved.

Although some discussions have been quite heated, Gines said, the meetings have contributed to a harmony between men and women.

"At our meetings, men have been brought to a deeper understanding of the female experience, and the same goes for females. There has been a lot more sensitivity between the genders," she said.

Gines said she planned to invite popular black poets to campus and would help put together a poetry yearbook showcasing each of the authors.

A poem reveals much about its author because poets' feelings are not "sugar-coated," she said.

"Poetry is a whole different artistic, verbal expression in a way that you don't get anywhere else," Gines said. "It is one of the greatest emotional expressions."

Pianist George Winston to perform at Lied

From Staff Reports

Accomplished pianist George Winston will bring his jazz-influenced style to the Lied Center on Thursday, Oct. 3. Winston, who normally performs two different shows a year, will be presenting his Winter Concert, full of the material comprising his acclaimed "December" album, as well as R&B, blues, jazz, and rock standards.

Winston has pioneered what critics have for years dubbed the "new age" music of the day. His stark original melodies and variations on classical anthems have been big sellers nationwide.

Winston's style has been described as "rural folk piano." While "rural" and "folk" tend to denote country or western styles, the term probably oversimplifies his approach. Winston's performances are known for their lack of synthesizers, relying instead on a basic grand piano.

Winston's Lied Center performance will mark a rare trip to Nebraska, and the first opportunity for many Lincolniters to hear Winston's music live. Tickets for George Winston's Winter Concert are available at the Lied Center box office. Reserved seats are $16, $12 for students.

Those attending the concert are asked to bring a donation of canned food, which will go to the Lincoln Food Bank. Collection baskets will be placed at the entrance.

Cafe

"Cafe" certainly is grounded firmly in realism. It's gothic and yet is nearly without time or place or even a distinctive locale. Its unnamed town is a stereotypical representation of the rural South, with its crude backwardness and isolation. The story is described by Callow as "primitive."

Above all, it's an unnerving and startling tale of the South during the great depression, and the battle incurred after a 10-day marriage between the local eccentric, Miss Amelia (Vanessa Redgrave), and the local criminal, Marvin Macy (Keith Carradine).

After the last of Marvin's nightly pleas for sex, and Miss Amelia's last refusal, the marriage explodes and Marvin is thrown out of the house, never having been any closer to his bride than when he stood next to her on the alter.

It is Reverend Willin (Rod Steiger) who marries the couple, and later describes the forces which brought Marvin to Amelia and how the absence of those same forces will cause her to reject him.

The reverend's proposals concerning love and its manipulative nature is the film's simple, dramatic element.

The characters' subtle expressions are disquieting, as is the film in general.

While the story stumbles curiously along, it never loses direction. When a humpback midget named Lyman appears in the town, claiming to be kin to Miss Amelia, it's obvious that things are not as they seem.

"The Ballad Of The Sad Cafe" is a film that is constantly unfolding into different arenas of the psyche. Its appearance is simple and sometimes minimal. Still, those raging undercurrents are there, plowing through and threatening to drag everyone along.

overexposed actress in Hollywood today, and often one of the most obnoxious.

However, "A Kiss Before Dying" does have Matt Dillon and that counts for something. Dillon has long been a solid actor, but he had to wait until "Drugstore Cowboy" to get the respect he deserved.

The plot concerns a rich young woman (Young) who unknowingly marries the psychopath (Dillon) who murdered her twin sister and continues killing to cover up the original crime.

Supposedly the tension and suspense build around this premise and the audience is expected to develop affection for Young's character and fear for her life. Unfortunately, Young can't act. And without a strong performance from the lead, this film can't succeed. (Thursday)
