given some chance to understand. Their features form slowly — as if from the mist which enshrouds the countryside. And perhaps that is the most important feature of the film. It offers us the opportunity to bridge the gap: the frozen borderland between the characters and ourselves.

There are rough passages, but the acting and dialogue are excellent overall, and the cinematography is disturbing. Eventually one has difficulty with the creeping slowness of the trip. It seems to us, as to the children, that they will never arrive. And there is so much rain, fog and cold that the viewers themselves may begin to feel a chill. It is a miserable season for travel. One almost gets the feeling that years and years have passed without the cameras ever leaving Greece.

'The Sandman' defies comic tradition

By Anne Steyer
Staff Reporter

They do not wear spandex or fly and the evil opposition they face are partly real. They are not typical comic book heroes.

They are The Endless, a group of seven siblings who are immortal personifications of various states of mind, the incarnations of spirits. They are characters in "The Sandman" comic book series.

Cosmic Comics is holding a "Sandman Slumber Party" at their East Park Plaza store, 200 N. 66th St, from 9:00 to 11:00 p.m. tonight. The promotional event will include a sale on "Sandman" merchandise and a "Sandman" character costume contest.

Although the series originated only in 1988, it is rapidly becoming a phenomenon. The first 20 issues have been packaged into three graphic novels. T-shirts and posters have been made, as well as wrist watches featuring characters from the comic.

"It sells real well," said Larry Lorenz, owner of Trade-A-Tape/

Comic Center, 145 S. 9th St. "It has a real solid following."

Lorenz said that college students represent the biggest buying group. Though the market is mainly men, Lorenz estimated that the female portion of the buyers has grown to 10 percent.

"More women read 'Sandman' than probably any other comic," said Brian Schur, owner of Cosmic Comics. "It's real accessible to either gender."

The main character in "Sandman" is Dream. His family appears in many of the issues, especially his older sister Death and his brother Destiny. The rest of his siblings, Despair, Delirium, Destruction and Desire, also appear from time to time.

"It's so multi-textured, it transcends normal comics," Schur said.

Series author Neil Gaiman has received a number of awards, including the 1991 Will Eisner Comics Industry Award for best writer.

"Sandman" won the 1991 World Fantasy Award for best short fiction. This is not a category in which comics are normally nominated, but the Sandman isn't a normal comic. The more common description is "graphic literature."

Gaiman has created an interesting blend of horror and fantasy, allowing his characters to grow and experience loss, pain and anger.

As in most comic series, each individual comic is a self-contained chapter in a story of greater scope. The scope is life on this human plane and the planes that surround it, heaven and hell.

The characters exist in the present, but have traveled in time to ancient Greece, the time of Shakespeare, the French Revolution and events in early American history. Various forms of myth and legend are woven into the story.

New characters are introduced who interact with Dream and occasionally the other members of The Endless.

"It's a comic geared to adults," Schur said. "It doesn't have to have nudity and sex and violence to be mature. The themes are just on a different level."

"It transcends the basic comic medium of superhero genre."

END VIOLENCE NOW

In conjunction with Domestic Violence Awareness Month, we have constructed a stop sign located in the City Union (West Galleria Wall) in order to create a statement as well as an overall awareness concerning violence on our campus.

This stop sign is for everyone, MALE and FEMALE, and will represent a collective effort by UNL students and faculty.

You can show your support by anonymously placing one of the provided stickers on the actual stop sign from October 21-Nov 4.

The purpose of this project is to show that violence of all sorts DOES EXIST at UNL and must be STOPPED NOW.

GREAT opportunity to get involved!
