Art department students protest use of old, deteriorating kilns

By Adeana Leftin
 Senior Reporter

More than 15 students filled the conference room of the dean of the College of Arts and Sciences Monday to protest "dysfunctional" equipment in the art department.

After meeting with Dean John Peters, Kjell Cronn, a junior art ceramics major, said the deteriorating condition of the department's last functioning kiln had prompted the protest.

Deb Oden, a junior art major with a ceramics emphasis, said that at the beginning of the fall semester two or three of the four electric kilns were functioning. Both of the gas kilns were broken.

According to Oden, most of the kilns had been with the department for decades and had been on their "last leg" for the past few semesters. The broken kilns still are in the Nelle Cochrane Woods Art building.

"(Ceramic students) can't keep mending with wire and bubble gum," Cronn said.

Peters said he was willing to finance the replacement of the kilns by diverting funds that were to be used to build an outdoor pavilion.

"It appears to us that we have an emergency," Peters said. "We can't wait for the pavilion."

Oden said the education of art students had been stunted by the lack of equipment. Five classes have had to use one kiln that should handle only one class, she said, and many students' works have been destroyed.

The department needs more kilns of more than one variety, Oden said. Larger and hotter gas kilns would allow students more experience and experimentation, she said.

"It will be the end of the ceramics department... if we're not able to get these," Oden said.

Questionnaire

"Some people even said, 'In my department, I didn't even know what was happening until I read it in the newspaper,'" she said.

Mace said the UAAD hoped the information would give the BRRC additional insight about the budget reductions.

"All we can ask the BRRC is to take the information into consideration in what I consider to be a difficult and controversial process," she said.

"If our information helps them in their deliberations, then we will have had some degree of success."

2 vehicles stolen from UNL lots last week

From Staff Reports

Two vehicles were stolen from University of Nebraska-Lincoln parking lots last week, a UNL police official said.

Lt. Mylo Bushing said one vehicle was stolen from the College of Dentistry parking lot on East Campus between noon and 4:44 p.m. Saturday. The vehicle was valued at $23,000 and had contents worth $8,800.

Bushing said the owner said he believed the vehicle was locked; however, the owner did leave a pair of house and auto keys in the console between the seats.

Cass County Sheriff Department officials found some of the vehicle's contents by Elmwood but did not find evidence of the vehicle, Bushing said. The vehicle had a full tank of gas.

Bushing said the vehicle was entered into a national computer network so other states will know that it is a stolen vehicle and to use caution when approaching the drivers.

The second vehicle, valued at $700, was stolen from the parking lot on 14th and Avery streets sometime between Oct. 24 and Oct. 26, Bushing said. The owner said she was sure that the vehicle was locked and that she had the only two sets of keys to the auto. This vehicle had half a tank of gas.
