sponsible for their surroundings and lives." Opening the bookstore in The Gathering Place seemed appropriate since the staff and volunteers foster a growing attitude by offering meals and conversation to those in need. The bookstore is open limited hours because Martin is unavailable to staff it at all times. Martin does have eight volunteers who help keep the store open when she is not available. Martin said she hopes to work something out soon with The Gathering Place to enable the store to remain open more hours during the day. Business has been "horrible with the weather we've been having," Martin said. The women's community in Lincoln has been supportive in talk, but not necessarily in business, she said. But as more people learn about the bookstore, Martin said, she hopes they will come in. She travels to conferences to sell her books and makes most of her livelihood through this business. Through traveling, she keeps up to date on new books that are available and what people are interested in reading. Martin has more than 500 titles, including new and used books. She offers a wide selection of books to choose from, including environmental, gay/lesbian, recovery, self-help, domestic violence, multicultural issues and other issues concerning women. Martin also carries calendars, jewelry — some by local women artists — and music. She encourages people to bring in their used books. Arbor Moon is open Monday through Friday from noon to 1 p.m. and from 7 to 9 p.m. and Saturday from 1 to 4 p.m.
