His breakthrough hit "Around the Way Girl" occupied the pop charts for most of the summer, briefly cracking the Billboard Top Ten, while his single "Mama Said Knock You Out," which was heavily promoted by MTV, solidified him as the rap artist with the biggest cross-over potential.

Tickets for the 8 p.m. show are $16.50 at the door, $17.50 at most TicketMaster outlets.

"Loveless" My Bloody Valentine Creation/Sire

You've heard the imitations. Now listen to the original.

My Bloody Valentine is responsible for the creation of the "in-est" sound in music — the beautiful wall of guitars. Ride does it. Chapterhouse and Curve dance to it. Lush and Moose make it pretty.

But only My Bloody Valentine does it right.

And their latest release, "Loveless," does it flawlessly.

"Loveless" has been anxiously awaited since the release of MBV's previous LP, "Isn't Anything," on Creation Records nearly four years ago.

"Isn't Anything" featured the introduction of an all new noise in pop music. British music press called it "race car music," because of its huge growling guitars and racing pace.

Since the release of "Isn't Anything," MBV's imitators have been much busier than the original. While Ride, Lush and Chapterhouse can release four EPs and an album in just over a year, MBV has adopted a bit slower pace.

Since the release of "Isn't Anything," the band has only released two EPs, totaling eight songs. However, unlike its more prolific imitators, everything these guys have released has been near-perfect.

More is not always better. MBV's release of their "Glider" EP last year shocked anyone bright enough to hear it, and was released in the United States shortly thereafter to similar reactions.

"Soon," the featured track from the EP, also closes the new album — in case you missed it the first time. The song's rhythm track is unmistakably danceable, but the music is far from House. The dischordant jangle of guitar over grunge punctuates the barely discernible words of the verse and chorus.

"Loveless" also includes last year's single "To Here Knows When" from the "Tremolo" EP.

"To Here Knows When" features the surreal beauty of Bilinda Butcher's dreamy lyrics, whispering Cocteau-esque words and ooo's. The texture of the song is unbelievably dense, with layers of guitars played over a backwards tape loop of sampled guitar feedback.

The effect is unlike anything else in music.

The genius of My Bloody Valentine lies in the songwriting. Shields' genius allows grunge, noise and feedback to be as beautiful as anything that the Kitchens of Distinction or the Cocteau Twins could create. MBV uses samples, tape loops and drum programming to create masterful melodic creations — not simplistic dance music that such electronic processing is usually used for.

"Loveless" is the perfection of the art that My Bloody Valentine created.
