

Dance troupe to perform at Lied

From Staff Reports

The Joseph Holmes Chicago Dance Theatre, a modern dance troupe, will perform tonight and Saturday at the Lied Center for Performing Arts.

entertainment SHORTS

The Holmes Theatre, a multi-racial, 13-member group, is widely regarded as one of the top dance companies in the world. The theatre has been nominated four times for the National Association for Campus Activities Performing Artist of the Year. Tickets for the performance are available at the Lied Box Office, 12th and R streets.

Tickets are $16, $12 and $10, half-price for UNL students.

clue that anything else is going on. Yet, there is an underlying story in "The Firebugs."

If one knows a little bit about the original context of the play and its author, order begins to form out of chaos.

Frisch was German. This play was written after World War II. In the German context, it becomes a more obvious statement about the Nazis and their seemingly impossible rise to power.

Biederman represents the German people in the 1920s and 1930s. The "firebugs" or arsonists are the Nazis whom he accommodates.

Frisch is commenting on the incredible ease with which the Nazis rose to power, and the lack of resistance offered by the common German. From Frisch's point of view, the Nazis must have been as blatant about the atrocities they wanted to commit as the arsonists of the play are.

Biederman comments at one point, "If I report them, I'll make enemies of them."

He desperately hopes he can avert disaster by making concession after concession, but in the end, they send his house up in flames.

An interesting aspect of the play is the use of a Greek-style chorus of firefighters (Ann Niergarth and Dylan McCullough) to help tell the story. They serve different functions in the play. Most of the time they narrate and foreshadow, and occasionally they act as Biederman's conscience.

In the end, the chorus tells the audience, "The fire killed many, but changed nothing."

Though many people would question the idea that World War II changed nothing, Frisch's is an interesting point to consider.

Many of these confusing moments could have been avoided if notes had been included in the program to clue people in. Understanding "The Firebugs" without a little help is too much to expect of an audience, and that is the only real fault of the production.

the course to develop his musical skills.

"I've always been interested in trying composition," Miller said. "I'm a vocal performance major now, but I'm not sure what my minor will be in graduate school. I wanted to give everything a chance. I also study composition because it is a lot of fun."

Miller has written three pieces to accompany sonnets by William Shakespeare. The sonnets, which are about vanity and the aging process, were inspired by personal experiences, he said.

"Like everyone else, I'm afraid of growing old," he said. "So when I checked out a book of sonnets, the ones on aging were meaningful to me."

Miller said Shakespeare's verse also was an inspiration for his music.

"Sonnets are a certain form with three quatrains and a couplet. Each quatrain has its own point its trying to get across, and I modeled the songs' style after that."

The songs are piano and vocal compositions and include both tonal (which uses an eight-note scale) and atonal (12-note scale) sections. Miller gives Snyder credit for helping him write in an atonal piece.

"This is my first piece, and I had a tendency to stick with tonal ideas and not venture into the atonal world," Miller said. "I started writing everything as tonic and dominant progressions. Snyder steered me away from that."

The Student Composers Recital will be held Sunday at 3 p.m. in Westbrook Recital Hall, 10th and R streets. Admission is free.

THE FAR SIDE

By GARY LARSON

"Well, according to the dictionary, I'm just a large, flightless bird from East Africa. . . . But believe me, Doris — once you get to know me, you'll see I'm much, much more than that."
