cellor and director of public relations, said "the slate had been wiped clean" in considering to which institutions UNL should compare itself.

"We decided, if we were going to do this from the beginning, how would we do it?" Mulnix said.

Mulnix said the group would choose potential peer group members from land-grant colleges that are members of the Association of American Universities.

Beyond that, he said, "We have no specific criteria."

The committee, which has been meeting once a week since September, will meet Monday with Moore and Regent Charles Wilson of Lincoln to discuss each side's concept of UNL's peer group.

Howe said the committee will then continue its evaluation of the peer group. He said he hoped it would finish the evaluation by next semester.

If a new peer group is selected, it will have to be endorsed by Chancellor Graham Spanier, NU President Martin Massengale and the NU Board of Regents.

ASUN may take extra step by recruiting minorities for government positions

By Adeana Leftin
 Senior Reporter

ASUN will begin reaching out to minority students instead of waiting for them to come to it if the senate passes a resolution tonight, the speaker of the senate said.

Steve Thomlison said the resolution would make the Association of Students of the University of Nebraska recruit minority students for senate and committee positions instead of waiting for students to approach it.

"If you're really committed to (getting minorities involved) then you have to go a step farther," he said.

If the resolution passes, Thomlison said, senators will write letters and send representatives to various minority organizations to inform them of openings they can apply for.

"In years past," he said, "in ASUN the attitude has been if you wanted to be involved: great, fill out an application."

The resolution suggests that the University of Nebraska-Lincoln broaden the cultural base of its curriculum. It also urges other university bodies to release formal policy statements about expanding cultural education.

In other business, ASUN senators will consider a resolution recommending that greek houses be included in campus postal services.

According to the resolution, all other university facilities, including residence halls on both City and East campuses, receive campus mail services.

Thomlison said the resolution would make accessibility more equitable campuswide.

"Sometimes greek houses are accused of being favored," he said. "Now the tables are turned."

UNL Chancellor Graham Spanier will attend tonight's meeting.

East Union to convert dairy store into bakery

By Wendy Mott
 Staff Reporter

Members of the Union Board voted Tuesday to convert the dairy store space in the East Campus Union to a bakery similar to the one in the Nebraska Union.

Currently the space is used as a study lounge.

Daryl Swanson, director of Nebraska Unions, said the move was an effort to increase activity in the East Campus Union.

The idea to add a bakery was based on the success, both financially and as a service to students, of the bakery on City Campus, Swanson said.

In other action, six Union Board members will be attending the Cultural Diversity Summit on Jan. 17. The summit, which is co-sponsored by Faculty in Support of Cultural Diversity and the Chancellor's Commission on the Status of Minorities, will address issues of insufficient cultural diversity education and a lack of publicity to minority students about positions in student organizations. Board members elected Eric Snyder, a senior English major and the current vice president, as their new president. Former president Chad Hartnett resigned from the board because of time conflicts.

Interviews for two available board positions will be next semester.

Erika Counselor, a sophomore in the College of Arts and Sciences, said the campus phones in the Nebraska Union will be lowered so that disabled students can reach them more easily. Counselor brought this problem to the board's attention after her participation in Wheelchair Wednesday in October.

The Nebraska Union will also receive another copy machine to allow students to make copies during union hours when the copy store is not open.

The next Union Board meeting will be at 5 p.m. on Jan. 14 in the Nebraska Union. Board meetings are open to the public.
