Lattimer said volunteers are essential to the parade. The Uptowners make up about 85 percent of the parade volunteers, she said.

"The parade couldn't be put on without them," she said.

Pre-parade entertainment will begin Saturday at 9:30 a.m. The Star City Parade will start at 11 a.m. in the parking lot west of Memorial Stadium and will proceed down O Street. The parade will turn right on Centennial Mall before ending at the Cornhusker Hotel. The parade will be broadcast live on KOLN/KGIN-TV, cable channel 11.

'Boughs' half-slow, half-great

By Mark Baldrige
Staff Reporter

This weekend in the Temple Building, Theatrix presents "Broken Boughs," directed by Layne Ehlers.

"Boughs" is a single production of two one-act plays: "27 Wagons Full of Cotton," written by Tennessee Williams and "Waiting on the Rocket," written by K. Scott Kolb, a University of Nebraska-Lincoln student.

"Wagons" is a dark play about crazy, mean Southern hicks, a sort of "Green Acres" gone to hell. It's a show with everything: sex, violence and violent sex.

Williams fans already will know the story of rough men and delicate, fainting women. Actually, the entire cast of "Wagons" is comprised of two men and one woman.

Two men play out an economic power struggle with a woman as counter, like poker chips. The play makes a point about the historical role of women as chattel.

"Wagons" is depressing, of course. If it weren't, it wouldn't be Tennessee Williams. This particular production is more so; it moves too slowly.

theater

On the other hand, "Waiting on the Rocket" makes the whole evening worth while.

Set in a crypt in Hollywood, the play looks at a night in the lives of two teenagers, Daria (Angie Holdsworth) and Adrian (Patrick Wilkins). They are death-punk sociopaths with a will to die. Fortunately, they also have a blind urge to live.

The two talk about their lives in a raw language, and the stories they tell are disturbing and vivid, offering a glimpse of life on the "wild side" of drug use, prostitution and violence.

Kolb has a real feel for language, for bringing alive the way people talk and the things they talk about. In the future, perhaps he will hone that skill even closer. At times his characters drift a little. But even that drift is worth watching.

"Rocket" is entered in the American College Theatre Festival. Plans were in effect for it to be critiqued by an emissary of that festival this evening.

"Broken Boughs" will be running tonight and Saturday at 7 p.m. and Sunday Dec. 8 at 2 p.m. Admission is $2 at the door.
