"His forte is shooting the basketball, and he's showing the courage, determination and maturity that seniors usually have," Nee said. "He's doing everything from picking up towels to hitting three-pointers, and he's doing whatever it takes to win."

As for those who have criticized the Huskers, Nee said Nebraska's recent success should open the eyes of doubters to how far his program has come.

"We've played for 98 years and are now on the verge of making history of two straight NCAAs," Nee said. "We lost four or five players off of last year's program — now we're right back at the same level we were at."

"We're playing in the toughest conference in the country and we go 12-1 in non-conference, so how can you criticize us?"

Harassment case settled

BOSTON (AP) — A sportswriter who alleged a New England Patriots player exposed himself in the locker room and taunted her while teammates encouraged him has settled her sexual harassment lawsuit for a reported $250,000-plus.

The settlement, announced Monday, came about a week before Lisa Olson's lawsuit against members of the football team was to go to trial.

Terms were not disclosed, but The Boston Globe said it learned from an unidentified source that the Patriots agreed to pay her about $500,000.

The Boston Herald, where Olson worked at the time of the incident, quoted sources as saying the sum ranged from at least $250,000 to more than $700,000.

Olson had alleged that while interviewing a player in 1990, athlete Zeke Mowatt exposed his genitals and made sexual remarks while egged on by two teammates. The incident stirred debate over women writers in the locker room.

Olson said she will use the money to establish a journalism scholarship at her alma mater, Northern Arizona University.

"Other than that, there's just not much I can say about them," Neumann said.

Winning the dual is not as important to Neumann as improvement, as his wrestlers work on their individual techniques.

"We look at this dual as one last tune-up for the Big Eight Tournament (March 7, in Norman, Okla.)," Neumann said. "Toward the end of the season, each time he's on the mat, a guy tries to improve some part of his wrestling. That's the most important thing we have to do out there."

Neumann said that while many coaches were happy just to finish the season, he was anticipating good things in the next three weeks, at the Big Eight and NCAA tournaments.

The NCAA Tournament will be March 18-20 at the Myriad in Oklahoma City.

Neumann said the morale of the team was good heading into the final stretch of the season.

"Our guys have a realistic attitude about what they need to do and what they can accomplish in the next few weeks," Neumann said. "There isn't anybody we're going to fool at the Big Eights."

"They went down to Oklahoma and played tough," Sanders said. "They improved a lot during the games."

Junior Josh Bullock is designated to start on the mound for Nebraska, Sanders said. After Bullock, Sanders said he planned to split the time among several pitchers.

The Huskers are scheduled to host Western Illinois for a doubleheader Saturday and a single game Sunday. Nebraska then travels to Wichita State on Tuesday.
