Theatrix comedy stars woodcutter

From Staff Reports

The Theatrix presentation of Moliere's comedy "The Doctor In Spite of Himself" will continue tonight and Saturday night in the Temple Building's Studio Theatre, 12th and R streets.

"The Doctor In Spite of Himself" follows a lazy but clever woodcutter, Sgnarelle, played by Scott Glen, who impersonates a doctor.

The play is directed by Marya Lucca-Thyberg, a University of Nebraska-Lincoln graduate directing student.

Performance times are 8 p.m. tonight and Saturday, with a 2 p.m. matinee on Saturday. Tickets for "The Doctor In Spite of Himself" are $2. Doors open a half hour before performance times.

trip provides them with insight about who they are and what the future holds for them. (Available now)

"Necessary Roughness" (PG-13) "Quantum Leaps" Scott Bakula plays a 30-something farmer who goes back to college to recapture his football glory days.

Also starring Lincoln native Harley Jane Kozak ("Arachnophobia") and comedian Sinbad, this football comedy has cameos by such pigskin greats as Dick Butkus, Earl Campbell and Hershel Walker. (Available now)

"Ricochet" (R) Oscar winner Denzel Washington ("Glory") is Nick Styles, a cop/attorney on his way to becoming the new assistant district attorney.

Helping him on his way is his highly publicized capture of psychotic hit man Earl Talbot Blake (John Lithgow playing against type).

Blake doesn't forget his public humiliation and plots revenge.

The movie also features rapper-turned-actor Ice T as the drug-dealing friend to whom Styles must return in order to nail Blake again. (Available now)

"Shout" (PG-13) This movie did not play in Lincoln, but it is supposed to be a drama/romance/feel-good/coming-of-age story starring John Travolta ("Look Who's Talking").

As Jack Cabe, an innovative music teacher at a reform school, Travolta transforms the lives of his troubled students and bucks the administration at the same time. (Available now)

Seattle grunge troupe Love Battery generated a current of excitement through the crowd Tuesday night at Duffy's Tavern.

Band energizes Love Battery jump starts crowd

By Carter Van Pelt
Staff Reporter

"The real gut-wrenching power in most recordings comes from the guitars," Love Battery vocalist/guitarist Ron Nine said before the band's Tuesday night show at Duffy's Tavern. The comment referred to the guitar-grunge sound that Love Battery has developed since forming in 1989.

"That's what sounds good to us, so we just go for it." The end product of the Love Battery formula at times could be described as a combination of Husker Du and Sonic Youth, but the influences Nine cited go far beyond those bands.

"I'd be happy to be compared to Miles Davis or Digital Underground ... because if I like something, it's gonna be an influence. I like beer, so it's an influence."

Even though Miles Davis and Digital Underground probably weren't the first things in the minds of the Duffy's crowd Tuesday evening (okay, beer was), the fans were treated to an hour of Love Battery's powerful set, featuring music from their latest Sub Pop release, "Dayglo."

Perhaps one reason why the guitars are so interesting in this band is that Love Battery uses them as creatively and thoroughly as any band since The Jesus and Mary Chain. Nine and guitarist Kevin Whitworth play slide on many of the songs. Feedback and distortion are utilized, but not in the chaotic manner of JMC. Nine and Whitworth are into melodies, hooks, and cool riffs that give the songs a pop side much like other bands from their native Seattle.

And what about Seattle?

Rolling Stone magazine recently called it the next Liverpool and mentioned Love Battery in the article. Nine agreed with RS's explanation of how the city got its own musical sound.

"It's isolated up there," Nine said. "San Francisco is 14 hours away, and between Seattle and Minneapolis, there's nothing. For the longest time, it was just the same musicians feeding off each other and influencing each other," he said. "With that came the independent labels and national exposure."

Nine says the music scene in Seattle owed a debt to Sub Pop artist Mudhoney. "They really broke the whole thing open." He also credited Soundgarden, but cited them as more of a metal band and less indicative of the Seattle sound developed by the likes of Tad, the Melvins and Nirvana.

According to Nine, Love Battery's short-term goals include putting out another album on Sub Pop. The group has already written eight songs for a new LP. Their two month tour ends in Denver this week, but the group will be back on the road in the summer for selected East Coast dates and a European tour with the Screaming Trees.

"We want to continue to grow," Nine said. "We want to make a living at this. Obviously, we're barely squeaking by right now."

Nine said the most important thing he wanted people to know about Love Battery was that the music comes first. "That's what's foremost to us. It's not just an image, it's not a hype. That's the whole point of alternative music," he said.

Nine said he wanted people to be subjective when listening to Love Battery. "There's no real message other than what people can get out of it themselves. We feel strongly about things, and hopefully we're not preaching," Nine said.

"I don't think we are. It's up to people to make up their own minds, that's the bottom line."

The Duffy's crowd made up its mind about Love Battery. Many hung around to talk to the band, buy tapes and CDs, get autographs, and make sure that Love Battery will be back in Lincoln for another show.
