Organization plans to run group office

3 groups fighting for resource center

By Jeremy Fitzpatrick
Senior Reporter

Members of the Women's Resource Center organized in a group called the Collective said at their weekly meeting Thursday that they considered themselves to be running the WRC and planned to continue to do so.

"We're meeting, and we're still making decisions," Cindy Douglas, a graduate sociology student and group member, said.

Three groups — the Collective, the WRC Advisory Board and the UNL-hired WRC Coordinator — have been fighting for control of the WRC. The Collective is not a recognized student organization at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

On Monday, Marilyn Bugenhagen, director of the Campus Activities and Programs office, dissolved the WRC Advisory Board because of the infighting over who was in charge of the WRC. A new board will be appointed in the fall.

James Griesen, vice chancellor for student affairs, said his office previously had recog-

10th Street pedestrian overpass to be built

By Sean Green
Senior Reporter

Construction will begin this fall on a pedestrian overpass that will run alongside the planned 10th Street viaduct, a city official said.

The overpass will be accessible to pedestrians, bicyclists and those who use wheelchairs, said Bruce Michaelson, head of the Public Works Department's Design Engineering Division.

City officials hope the overpass will be completed by the spring of 1993, Michaelson said, giving pedestrians access over the railroad area while the new 10th Street viaduct is being built.

To meet the requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act, he said, the pedestrian overpass would include a level resting area about every 40 feet for people who use wheelchairs.

While the overpass will have level areas off to the sides, he said, the center portion of the bridge will have a consistent grade for bicycle riders.

Michaelson said that as far as city officials knew, the project was the only one of its kind in the nation.

The overpass designers worked closely with several University of Nebraska-Lincoln officials, he said, including Kim Todd, a campus landscape architect with UNL's Landscape Services.

The total cost of the new bridge and the pedestrian overpass should be $6 million, Michaelson said.

Funds to pay for the project will be shared between the Federal Highway Administration, the city of Lincoln and other agencies, he said.

The pedestrian overpass probably will account for 10 to 15 percent of the total cost.

Construction on the bridge is scheduled to begin after the last home Nebraska football game of the 1993 season, he said. The viaduct should be completed before the first football game in 1994.

Michaelson said there was no doubt that the existing 10th Street bridge needed to be replaced.

"It is still capable of maintaining the 10-ton limit, but it's in very poor condition," he said.

In a recent federal sufficiency evaluation, he said, the bridge received a rating of 5.7 on a scale of 100, with 70 being adequate.

Basketball dance squad draws student interest

By Melissa Dunne
Staff Reporter

More than 330 UNL students expressed interest this week in a dance squad that will perform during halftimes of Nebraska home basketball games.

"I think that (the dance squad) would be an asset to the university in terms of spirit," said Carol Grell, an academic adviser and sponsor of the dance squad.

"There really seems to be a need for some group to provide entertainment during basketball games."

Although the University of Nebraska-Lincoln had a dance squad called the Huskerettes seven or eight years ago, the squad was disbanded for "various and sundry" reasons, Grell said.

"We are planning to start all over with a new name and a positive image," she said at an informational meeting Monday.

Grell also said she planned to work with the yell squad and flag corps.

"Our goal is not to compete with these groups, but to complement them and work together," she said.

The dance squad has received an excellent response, Grell said. About 230 women attended the informational meeting, she said, and at least 100 more have contacted her.

Only full-time students are eligible for the squad. They must have a cumulative GPA of 2.0 and pay a $10

Vandals spray paint messages at stadium

UNL police say no suspects yet in investigation

From Staff Reports

An unknown party spray painted several Memorial Stadium doors Wednesday with female biological symbols and the message "Keep your hands off our bodies," a UNL police official said.

Lt. Mylo Bushing said the University of Nebraska-Lincoln Police Department received a call at 9:39 p.m. about a suspicious party at the stadium.

He said police found the building damaged, but no one was in the area.

The message and the symbols, spray painted in blue, were found on all the doors on the east side of the stadium, he said.

A brick was thrown through the windows of the south doors, Bushing said. A female biological sign was painted on the brick, he said, and a note with the same message was attached.

The Bob Devaney/Tom Osborne Monument was spray painted with the message "Fight to unite," he said.

"We don't know who called the dispatcher," Bushing said. "We have no suspects, but we are still investigating."

"We don't want to make any speculations at this point," he said.
