Buwick

"Nowadays, I don't think anyone has a clear-cut advantage," he said. "It all comes down to who has the most heart. The best team is the one that is able to put two of the best meets together in 24 hours."

Although the Huskers will be competing in front of their home crowd, that doesn't mean they'll be favored, Buwick said, but it should help.

"It's definitely an advantage to host," he said. "Probably the only advantage Nebraska has is its home court."

But even that isn't enough, he said. Competing in front of another team's home crowd can sometimes bring out the best in other teams.

"It's always an incentive to challenge the crowd of the home team," Buwick said.

The pressure of the team finals is also enough to make a good team crumble, Buwick said. With two freshmen and five sophomores, Nebraska might be too young to cope with that pressure, he said.

"Nebraska's relying on youth and inexperience," he said. "Their kids haven't gone through high-pressure situations like the team finals yet.

"The athletics competing in the team finals will probably face more competitive pressure than ever before."

That is when having a coach such as Allen will help the Huskers, Buwick said. Allen has led Nebraska to seven national championships in his 23 years at Nebraska.

"Each coach has a different style in preparing a team, whether it's physical or emotional," he said.

"Whatever he does, Francis Allen is excellent in preparing a team for the national championships."
