where knowledge is created and transmitted. This kind of university will play a critical role in the next decade," Leitzel said.

"This is why UNL is interesting to me." Leitzel also enjoys the atmosphere at the university.

"A university is a special community. Everybody is learning. It's an exciting place to be," Leitzel said.

She said that her most challenging position is her current position at the National Science Foundation.

"NSF has a high priority for improving student abilities in science and math all across the board as well as improving the accessibility of women and minorities to the field. As decentralized as education is in this country, this is very challenging," Leitzel said.

When Leitzel assumes her post at UNL on August 15, her duties will include oversight of the Graduate College and the International Affairs Office. Leitzel will also oversee all academic programs on campus except those in the Institute for Agriculture and Natural Resources.

Leitzel will receive an annual salary of $128,000.

Chancellor Graham Spanier said items high on his agenda for Leitzel include an overhaul of general education on campus and budget and fiscal issues.

Leitzel has written several textbooks and won several awards including the Director's Award for Management Excellence at the NSF last year. But Leitzel's most valued award is her Distinguished Teaching Award that she received at Ohio State.

"It's the one I prize the most because I very much value teaching," Leitzel said.

Leitzel received her bachelor's degree from Hanover College in 1958, a master's degree from Brown University in 1961 and her doctorate from Indiana University in 1965. All three were earned in mathematics.

Additionally, she has held several leadership roles in the Mathematics Association of America, and is a member of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, the National Council of Teachers of Mathematics and Sigma Xi.

In her spare time, and Leitzel admits she doesn't have much of it, she enjoys outdoor activities, such as hiking and swimming as well as and spending time with her family.

time as a graphic artist at the Lincoln Journal-Star.

Her abilities as an artist were damaged by the head injuries she received, and she told of frustration in not being able to see detail in her art work. She said she feels the previous quality of her work will come back gradually, and she has no plans to seek another career.

But, Mountain said, worst of all has been her entire personality change since the attack.

"I was very happy, and always smiling. I looked at things optimistically," Mountain said.

She said she is regaining some of her old optimism slowly, and smiling more now. Mountain said that her co-workers had been especially understanding during this time.

"You learn to know who your good friends are, by the way they react and the way they help you," Mountain said.

As for her husband, whom she married after the attack, Mountain praised him for his perseverance, in the face of the changes brought on by her injuries.

"He always sticks with me, even when my personality is awful. I don't know if anyone else would have acted as he did," Mountain said.

Both expressed relief that the trial process for Baldwin is nearly over. She said the trial and surrounding publicity have been a constant source of stress for her. "For a while, I was afraid to be seen in public, wondering if someone was out to get me," Mountain said.

She added that the couple still does not go out much.

Both also expressed some lingering bitterness over the attack, though it is lessening. Mountain said the anger is intermittent, but now she is hoping to get better, "because I have to."

Her husband told reporters he has learned to think of the beating as an accident, not as an assault.

Despite the difficulties over the past six months, the couple said they are looking for the future to improve, and are considering starting a family.

For the immediate future, the couple are planning a honeymoon.

ings and other categories. Money for the program needs was broken down into broad categories for each of the university's four campuses and university-wide expenses.

"I look at the proposed budget and I can identify some of the things we've identified as high priority, but there are things I don't see," regent Charles Wilson of Lincoln said.

He said library services and student counseling were examples of areas the regents had earlier identified as priorities, yet they didn't seem to be specifically provided for in the budget requests.

In other business, the regents approved a $19 million contract for construction of the Beadle Center for Genetics and Biomaterials Research in Lincoln. The center is expected to house more than 235 researchers and faculty members specializing in agricultural biotechnology.

The regents also approved creation of a center for Albanian studies at UNL.

beverages will not be sold that day.

The event is actually an expansion of Updowntown's Jazz Festival, Erickson said. However, this year people will be able to enjoy not only music, but food too.

He said that plans for next year include adding artists to the list.

Entertainment begins at 11:30 a.m. on Friday with The Jazz Monks, followed by Souled Out and S*Hook.

Rounding out the day will be a performance by Buckwheat Zydeco.

Saturday's music kicks off at 6:30 p.m. with Roadside Attraction and finishes with The Butanes Soul Revue.

The food also is varied, Erickson said. Partakers of the event will be able to sample the restaurateurs' Chocolate Soup, Stuffed Jalapenos, Indian Fry Bread, Gourmet Ice Cream and Beef Vindaloo, among others.

Tickets for food will be available at the event, Erickson said. They will be sold in strips of nine for $5.

Graduates with loans required to attend counseling session

Seniors graduating in August who received federal student loans while attending UNL will be required to participate in a final exit loan counseling session before officially graduating.

Federal loans include the Perkins Loan (formerly NDSL), the Stafford Loan (formerly GSL) and the Supplemental Loan for Students (SLS).

Strategies for upcoming payment, including consolidation, collapsing and combining will be discussed. Also options will be given for loan cancellation, deferment and general debt management practices.

To complete the exit process, students must provide one or more references. Students should bring an ink pen, two credit references and two personal references to the session.

All sessions will be held at the City Campus Union and will last about 30 minutes. Sessions are scheduled for July 22, 23 and 24 at 12:30 p.m. and 4:00 p.m. Failure to attend will result in diplomas being held.
