Courts renovated; fitness area added

From Staff Reports

The UNL Coliseum should be open by the first day of classes, after 16 months and $4.3 million worth of construction.

The opening, originally set for July, was put on hold because of delays in the arrival of hardware for door locks, said Stan Campbell, director of Campus Recreation.

Renovations include four volleyball/basketball courts, six badminton courts, improvement and expansion of men's and women's locker rooms — each with a sauna — a fitness/aerobics room equipped with a sound system and a combative arts room. The facility, including the swimming pool, will be accessible to the disabled.

The UNL volleyball team will use the volleyball/basketball courts for practices and home matches. The stands seat 4,500 fans.

The Coliseum's renovation was part of a $14.9-million project that began more than five years ago with construction of the Lee & Helene Sapp Memorial Recreational Facility, Campbell said. The project also includes renovation of Mabel Lee Hall, which is scheduled to be completed by the end of fall.

The Coliseum will be dedicated September 12.

Diversity tops ASUN 'to do' list

Group organizing programs about rape awareness

By Chuck Green
Senior Reporter

Increased rape awareness and cultural diversity is at the top of University of Nebraska-Lincoln ASUN President Andrew Sigerson's "to do" list this fall.

Sigerson returned to Lincoln from Washington, D.C., last week, where he was an intern for an associate director to Clayton Yeutter, domestic affairs counselor to the president.

Throughout the summer, Sigerson stayed in contact with senators from the Association of Students of the University of Nebraska, and his plans seemed to be on schedule, he said.

"We're close to having a game plan for everything we want to get done this fall," he said.

Sigerson said he planned to make a "State of the Campus" address to UNL students during the first month of classes. In the speech, Sigerson will inform students of ASUN's plans for the year and will report on the status of projects discussed in his campaign platform.

Before he left in May, Sigerson met with ASUN vice presidents Liz Healey and Trent Steele to plan for the fall and to assign various platform projects to senators.

Many projects already have been put into action, Sigerson said.

Wheelchair accessibility was improved in the Bob Devaney Sports Center in time for UNL's summer graduation ceremony last weekend, and areas were provided for disabled people to watch the ceremonies.

Another matter of concern for Sigerson was the parking situation on campus. Sigerson said he had discussed possible improvements with members of the Parking Advisory Board. He said he would urge students to increase their input to campus parking officials.

Sigerson also is trying to organize a rape awareness program, which will include seminars that will "get the entire campus thinking about the problem of rape, and not just some of the time," he said.

One way to accomplish that, he said, is to bring together representatives from the UNL Police Department, University Health Center, Women's Center, sororities, fraternities and residence halls to discuss ways of increasing awareness of rape.

To Sigerson, the development of a campus multicultural awareness program will pose the most difficult challenge, he said.

"That certainly will be the most visual of our goals, because if the problem isn't tackled, people will see it first," he said. "Multicultural issues are very hard ones to deal with because nobody agrees on them."

One of Sigerson's plans calls for weekly meetings with campus cultural group leaders to discuss solutions to existing problems and issues that may arise. He also wants to set up a cabinet of four to seven people, separate from the existing ASUN structure, consisting of campus cultural group leaders.

"Education is the only way to bring about cultural diversity, and that's sometimes hard to do if nobody wants to listen and learn," he said. "It won't be easy, but we're going to try our hardest."
