

Secondary stymies passing attack

Defensive backs control scrimmage

By Jeff Griesch
Staff Reporter

Nebraska's football team ended two-a-day practices with a scrimmage dominated by the Cornhusker defensive backs.

The secondary frustrated the Husker quarterbacks throughout the scrimmage with blanket coverage highlighted by a spectacular interception late in the scrimmage by cornerback Kenny Wilhite.

Husker secondary coach George Darlington said he was happy with the secondary's performance.

"Overall, we were pretty pleased with our performance and I think we are developing quite well," Darlington said.

Nebraska coach Tom Osborne was also impressed with the secondary's performance.

"Barron Miles has really come on and become a good player, (Lorenzo) Brinkley is playing better, (with Wilhite and cornerback John Reece) that gives you four kids at corner," Osborne said. "Another guy is Mike Heins — he is probably 30 percent better than he was a year ago. So what looked like it might be a real concern has become right now pretty good."

Darlington credits the secondary's quick development to intense competition within the positions.

"Competition enhances the ability to improve, and right now we have very few positions nailed down so we have good competition," he said.

Wilhite's interception answered any questions remaining about the condition of his knee, which he injured against Kansas last season. The injury forced him to miss the remainder of the season.

"Wilhite's knee is in great shape, and his recovery is really exceptional, considering other kids have taken two years to come back from similar injuries," Darlington said.

Darlington said he had also been pleased with the examples and leadership set by Wilhite, Heins and senior strong safety Steve Carmer.

"We have gotten tremendous leadership from Kenny along with Mike Heins that has allowed the younger kids to improve more quickly," he said.
