Despite the circumstances, George said, his family's first trip to Nebraska had been good.

"People here have treated us very, very well," he said.
Hattie agreed.

"They're all beautiful people here and we love them," she said. "We have no animosity about anything."

George said two letters in particular caught his attention. He identified the senders as Patricia and Leslie, both of whom had experienced similar incidents in their families.

Eric said he, too, was pleased with the way he and his family had been treated in Nebraska, but stressed the importance of getting his brother back to his home in Roselle, N.J., as soon as possible.

"(Scott) needs to be around his family now and other people who love him," Eric said, "and not just people who love him for football."

Hattie said she still had faith that her youngest son would overcome his injury and regain his ability to walk.

"He will walk again," she said. "You've got to have faith always, and I have faith. And so does (Scott).
"Our child will be all right."

UNL Police Department takes to campus on foot

By Steve Smith

University police officers have been hitting the pavement this semester to increase their visibility to students, the UNL police chief said.

About 30 officers are spending a "solid amount" of patrol time on foot rather than behind the wheel, Ken Cauble said.

"Students feel intimidated by patrol cars, like we're unapproachable," he said.

At any time of day, at least one officer is patrolling the University of Nebraska-Lincoln campus on foot, he said.

The foot patrol began shortly before the fall semester and is required for part of an officer's shift, he said.

Cauble said that having officers patrol on foot was a popular suggestion from campus groups that were asked to comment about what was needed to get the UNL Police Department more in touch with students.

So far, students have responded favorably, he said.

"We've had several officers say that they've talked with students," he said. "We're getting closer to people this way."

Cauble said he hoped the added visibility of foot patrols would improve awareness of crime prevention on campus.

"We'd like for students to get to know the officers, so that if they see anything suspicious, they won't hesitate to let us know," he said.

An officer on foot was on the scene after the chemical explosion last week at Hamilton Hall and aided other authorities, Cauble said.

Officer Lisa Yardley, who also walks a beat, said she thought the foot patrol benefited officers.

"Being on foot has helped us find problems we didn't know about," she said.

Commuters to get new temporary lot

By Steve Smith

The UNL Parking Advisory Committee decided Thursday to temporarily reserve a new parking lot for commuter students.

The new lot, located south of Avery Avenue and northwest of the UNL Power Plant, is being covered with gravel and readied for student use, said Mike Cacak, interim parking manager and a committee member.

The lot will open next week to commuters.

The committee will decide at its October meeting whether the lot should remain an Area 20 commuter lot or become an Area 3 lot reserved for students living in the Harper-Schramm-Smith Complex.

Committee member Mark Goldfeder, a sophomore chemistry major and ASUN representative, said the lot should have been devoted to Harper-Schramm-Smith residents.

"Harper-Schramm-Smith is in dire need of parking," he said.

Goldfeder said he had received complaints from students living in residence halls who had been ticketed for parking in commuter lots. The students parked in the commuter lots because no room was left in their own parking areas, he said.

New distant lots already have been created for commuters this semester, Goldfeder said.

"Basically, there's about 150 commuter spots available, and there's a shuttle service that students have got to use," he said.

Although the new lot could hold only a small number of cars, Goldfeder said, it would be appreciated by Harper-Schramm-Smith residents.

"It's only 20 more spaces, but that's 20 more desperately needed spots for residence hall students," he said.

Cacak said the new parking area would benefit commuters more than Harper-Schramm-Smith residents.

Students living in those residence halls have left a 300-space paved lot north of the railroad tracks near Harper-Schramm-Smith half empty, he said.

"We could have made the new lot a faculty or staff area," he said, "but we're trying to accommodate the students first."
