Senate to appoint all four members; terms shortened

The Association of Students of the University of Nebraska decided Wednesday to take responsibility for appointing all members of the Parking Advisory Board and to shorten the terms that students serve on the board.

Under the previous system, ASUN appointed three students to positions on the board. Merlin Lawson, dean of graduate studies, appointed a graduate student for the final position.

Susan Oxley, chairwoman of ASUN's student life committee, said only the three student positions that were appointed by ASUN had been filled in the last few years.

ASUN President Andrew Sigerson said the graduate studies program did not actively seek to appoint members as ASUN did. But he said the board needed to have full student representation.

"We need on Parking Advisory Board as much representation as possible," he said.

Oxley said that under the new system, the student positions also would be limited to one-year terms so that each new ASUN president could appoint his or her own choices to the board.

"Each president has his own ideas and his own platform that he wants to follow through," she said.

But Sigerson said that because of the turnover rate of members on the board, the chairperson would be elected in the fall.

In other business, ASUN passed a resolution recognizing Ned Hedges, associate professor of English at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

Hedges, who serves as ASUN's electoral commission adviser, received the Lake Award for Academic Freedom, which is awarded to one faculty member per year, Sigerson said.

Sigerson said Hedges had made important contributions to both ASUN and UNL.

Also, Speaker of the Senate Andrew Loudon said ASUN senators would be visiting the University of Kansas at Lawrence Friday to meet with student government members there.

Election

ing the vice presidential debate could end up backfiring on him.

"That might be acceptable in some circumstances, but I think it also gets him into an awkward and embarrassing situation," he said. "Calling the nominee of the other major party in this country lacking in truthfulness, like Quayle did four or five times during the debate, raises the stakes to the point that one wonders if there is any payoff that you can get from that kind of campaign."

Sittig said he thought Ross Perot performed well during the first debate. But the presidential race is not likely to be close enough for Perot to have a significant effect, he said.

"Since I can't anticipate or imagine how Perot is going to win, the next best thing he can do is influence the outcome," he said. "But for him to affect the outcome, the election has to be closer than it is now."

If Bush wants to cut into Clinton's lead, he must take the initiative in tonight's debate to shift the focus to new issues and to draw Clinton into discussing them, Sittig said.

or weeks or months later.

Any student who wants help can obtain counseling and psychological services at the health center, Portnoy said. All meetings are confidential, he said, and the first three sessions are free so financial concerns do not deter students from seeking help.

Each counselor incorporates stress management into the sessions, Portnoy said.

He identified four areas of stress symptoms: physical, cognitive, emotional and behavioral.

Physical symptoms of stress include fatigue, nausea, sweating and grinding teeth, Portnoy said.

Cognitive symptoms include poor concentration, difficulties solving problems and nightmares.

Loss of control, depression, anxiety and guilt are some emotional symptoms, he said, and behavioral symptoms include changes in appetite, pacing and increased alcohol consumption.
