New parking garage looks questionable, student says

By Chuck Green

A shortage of money and an abundance of construction will add up to few new student parking spaces at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln in coming years, one ASUN representative said.

Mark Goldfeder, ASUN representative to the Parking Advisory Committee, said the outlook for more parking spaces at UNL was grim, especially because construction on the 10th Street viaduct and widening of Holdrege Street would erase 400 to 450 student spaces by next summer.

A proposal for a $10 million on-campus parking garage looks even less likely, because the Parking Advisory Board already has millions of dollars in bonds to repay before any more bonds can be issued, Goldfeder said.

But, he said, "Something has got to be done."

Contenders for regents seats say standards must be raised

By Shelley Biggs
Senior Reporter

Candidates in the race for western Nebraska's District 7 seat and central Nebraska's District 6 seat on the NU Board of Regents agree that tougher admissions standards would benefit UNL.

Incumbent Don Blank of McCook and John Massey of Scottsbluff are running for the District 7 seat, while regents chairman John Payne of Kearney is running unopposed for the District 6 seat.

Payne, a veteran supporter of tougher admissions standards, said general admissions standards for the University of Nebraska-Lincoln sometimes were difficult to set because of the different requirements of each college.

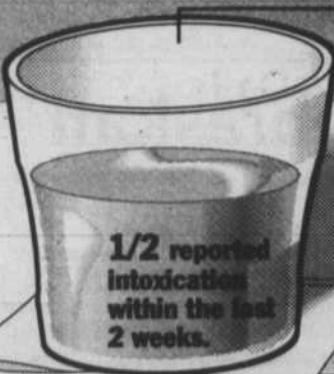

Blank, a dentist, said he was "very much" in support of tougher admissions standards that

Sex, alcohol create deadly alliance, expert says

Alcohol abuse and unprotected sex

About 80% of college students drink regularly, and one-half drink to intoxication. About 80% also report being sexually active, and 66% of those surveyed do not use condoms. The overlap of these habits increases the risk of spreading HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases.

Presidential nominee addresses students, unions on Iowa visit

By Dionne Searcey

DES MOINES, Iowa — Democratic presidential nominee Bill Clinton urged Iowans Saturday not to fear a change in the presidency.

"This is clearly a race of hope against fear," Clinton said. "The whole argument of the Bush crowd is that things could be worse. But my whole argument is that things could be better."

The Arkansas governor, sleeves rolled up, pounded out his message of change to more than 3,000 people at the Iowa State Fairgrounds.

"No one person running for president can protect you from all the changes in the world," he said. "We have to make change our friend, not our enemy."

Clinton reshaped his proposals for health care, tougher child-support laws and again criticized Bush for the poor economic situation in the United States.

"George Bush asked you to watch your wallet," he said. "You ought to. He's been picking it for four years."

Clinton singled out young adults as one group whose wallets were especially thin. However, he said, that shouldn't prevent them from attending college.

"I want the young people of America to get a college education by opening the doors of college education to all Americans without regard to finances," he said.

But, Clinton said, students must reciprocate for loans they get to attend college. Clinton said he would ask college graduates to pay back loans by serving for two years in such positions as teachers, police officers or health-care workers at reduced wages.

The students who chose not to go to a four-year college could receive two years of apprenticeship training, Clinton said. Those students would be able to "get a good job, not a dead-end job," he said.

Eddie Bufkin, a sophomore at Drake University in Des Moines, said he hoped Clinton could help his financial situation.

"I've been a student while George Bush was in office and have gotten less (financial) aid," Bufkin, an English and history major, said.

Bufkin said Clinton's proposals for re-

New research suggests that alcohol abuse leads college students to continue engaging in risky sexual behavior despite their knowledge of AIDS, a UNL instructor said Friday.

Alcohol abuse increases the likelihood of unplanned sex and multiple partners, and it decreases condom use, David Hunnicutt said. He teaches in the School of Health, Physical Education and Recreation at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

"The recommendation right now is that if you want to get a handle on your HIV problem, get a handle on your alcohol problem because the two are inseparable," he said.

Hunnicutt, education director of the Alcoholism and Drug Abuse Council of Nebraska, described the link between HIV and alcohol abuse on college campuses as part of the Nebraska Wesleyan University Forum.

Sexual and drinking behaviors begin before college, Hunnicutt said, so it's necessary to study these behaviors during junior and senior high school.

According to several studies, he said, half of the 20 million junior and senior high school students in the United States drink regularly. Of those, 33 percent binge-drink, or consume more than five drinks at one sitting. Junior and senior high school students consume 35 percent of all wine coolers sold in the United States, Hunnicutt said, and drink more than one billion cans of beer a year.

These numbers increase when high school graduates enter college, he said.

"Drinking has become commonplace on college campuses," he said. "It has become an integral part of college life."

Eighty percent of college students drink regularly, Hunnicutt said, and half of those reported intoxication within the last two weeks. These students consume 4.4 billion cans of beer, or 34 gallons per person, a year.

The figure for sexually active college students also is 80 percent, Hunnicutt said. Half of those students
