

RHA to help fund local speakers

By Trish Spencer

Funds from the Residence Hall Association will help bring two local speakers to campus to talk about rape prevention and overcoming drugs.

RHA members allocated $400 to bring T. Marni Voss, a local comedian and speaker, to campus during Rape Awareness Week, which is Nov. 12-19. Voss will speak in the Nebraska Union Ballroom on Nov. 17.

Selleck Senator Brad Prall said he had seen Voss perform.

"She is funny in a tasteful way," he said.

Matt Hammons, RHA president, said the Association of Students of the University of Nebraska needed help financing Voss' visit.

Several other campus organizations also are supporting speakers during Rape Awareness Week, Hammons said.

During the same week, the RHA Special Events Committee will bring former Nebraska football player Lynn Finney to campus, Jodi Veylupek, Neihardt senator, said.

Finney will talk to students Nov. 17 about overcoming drug and alcohol problems. The speech is not a part of Rape Awareness Week.

Drug and alcohol programs Finney has done in area elementary and high schools have been successful, Veylupek said. She said she expected 50 to 100 students to attend his program at UNL.

Finney is from Lincoln, she said, and attends graduate school at UNL. He will speak to students in the Neihardt Blue Room at 7 p.m.

The Special Events Committee will pay for his visit, which will cost about $100, she said.

In other business, Prall announced that the Campus Escort Service had moved to its new location in 7005 Selleck Hall. The service also has extended its hours to 2 a.m., he said.

Bates said. UNL Police Chief Ken Cauble said the official report filed by Officer Barb McGill, who contacted the five students, said a recorded message was reached at the listed number that said the number was no longer in service.

Bates' current number was at the end of the message, the report said.

However, repeated calls to the listed number since last Wednesday have provided no recording.

A spokeswoman at the Lincoln Telephone Company said messages announcing new numbers were only in service for three months after the number changes.

She added that the company provided unlisted telephone numbers by court order only, but would not comment on whether there had been such a mandate to release Bates' number.

"It just goes to show what extent they went to get this information," Bates said.

McGill would not comment. Cauble said he had no reason to suspect that McGill's report was inaccurate.

"She says she got a recording, and I'll stand by her," Cauble said. "I'm not going to call her a liar."

Bates and Briggs said they, as well as the other three students questioned, thought the interviews were conducted poorly and aggressively.

Briggs said McGill's interview with him was flippant.

"She was trying to keep it light-hearted, but as it went along, she got more aggressive and patronizing," he said. "Finally, when she took the picture, she waited for it to develop, then turned to me and said, 'So, does this look like you?'"

Bates said he returned a call to McGill after she tried to contact him while he was in class.

"She identified herself and said, 'You did know Candice Harms was in that class, didn't you?'" Bates said. "Right there, it was a leading question. The way she asked things just made you feel like you were under suspicion."

Cauble said last week that the photographs were necessary for "future information-gathering purposes," and not to identify anyone as a potential suspect.

Neither Briggs nor Bates said the police had contacted them again.

Bates said he was not looking for personal apologies, just a change.

"People like to discount things," he said. "A lot of non-minority students are thinking, 'Oh, no way would the police do something like that.' But what people need to do is wake up, take a look around and say, 'Is this the way it should be.'"

"Well, it isn't."

"Last Thursday, during a test we had in the class, three of us had to get verbal, we were getting such bad looks," he said.

Briggs said one of the other African-American men in the class accidentally bumped into a white woman sitting near him.

"She almost left her skin, she tried to get away so fast," he said.

Bates, who declined to have his picture taken by police, said he thought the way that investigators contacted the students was inappropriate.

"I can't name five black people I know who would feel comfortable with a line of questioning like that," Bates said. "And why did police not mind if my picture was taken? Is it important or not?"

"If it is, then why was I the only one with the option of not having to be photographed?"

Another question Bates wants answered is how police obtained his telephone number, which is unlisted.

The 1992-93 UNL Student Directory lists Bates' correct address, but the phone number that appears has been obsolete for more than two years.

Group attacks man for cash, another flees

From Staff Reports

No one was injured in a robbery and attempted robbery Saturday night on the University of Nebraska-Lincoln City Campus, a police official said.

UNL Police Capt. Mylo Bushing said a UNL student was robbed at 6:46 p.m. while he walked along the north side of Vine Street by the Coliseum. An unknown number of men attacked the student, pushed him to the ground and took his wallet, at a loss of $33.

An attempted robbery occurred at 8:48 p.m. in the parking lot north of Abel Residence Hall. Bushing said a pizza delivery man was confronted by three men with a knife who demanded his money. The delivery man ran to escape the suspects, who chased him for a short time. The suspects then fled in an unknown direction. No money was stolen.

puses will not be shoveled or plowed this winter, he said.

Dasenbrock said the sidewalk south of Love Library was one example of a sidewalk that would be ignored.

Also, any sidewalk with wood-chip or gravel surfaces will not be cleared, he said.

The interior sidewalks of the campuses do not fall under the city ordinance that requires all residents to clear the sidewalks in front of their homes following a snow, Dasenbrock said.

But UNL crews will follow the ordinance for all areas lining streets, he said.

Dasenbrock urged students, faculty and staff to wear proper footwear this winter on all areas of campus, because any area could become slippery from snow or ice.

"It is impossible to keep every area clear at all times," he said. "There will always be snow accumulation."
