

Reggae band to make return trip to Lincoln

band REVIEW

By Carter Van Pelt
Staff Reporter

If you are into reggae and you ever wanted to say that you saw a band before they made the big time, then take time out this Thursday, Friday or Saturday to check out Les Exodus at Rockin' Robin, 1435 O St.

Les Exodus, a five-piece reggae act, based in Minneapolis, returns to Lincoln this weekend after two sensational and well-received performances last month.

The band was formed in May 1990 by Innocent Galinoma and his long-time friend Onesimo Kibiria — both of whom are from Tanzania, in East Africa. After the band began touring regularly last year, a lineup change took place incorporating the drummer, keyboardist and rhythm guitarist from World Citizens to form the current band.

Les Exodus has had the distinction of opening for top world reggae acts, such as Ziggy Marley, Judy Mowatt, Sugar Minott and Mikey Dread, and has earned a solid reputation for extensive touring of the Midwestern United States.

The music of Les Exodus, according to lead singer/guitarist Innocent, is largely influenced by Bob Marley, both in form and content.

"Bob opened a lot of doors," Innocent said. "We want to keep doing what Bob was doing and keep roots reggae going."

The band's live performances always include one set of Bob Marley covers, but they take excursions into Calypso, Soca, African and rub-a-dub reggae sounds as well.

Innocent said he felt the current world reggae scene has gotten commercial with its dance-hall disco sounds.

"I'm not crazy about electronic sounds," he said. "It's not musicians producing the music. People are doing things in the studio that can't possibly be done (live) on stage."

Innocent said his philosophy in writing was to communicate.

"My lyrics are about personal experiences and world events. I'm trying to bring people of all races together, to stand up as one. That's what reggae and Rasta (the Rastafarian religion) is all about."

On stage last month, Innocent made the profound proclamation that "reggae music is the music of the people who speak the truth."

He explained that was an expression of his overall concept.

"If you love reality, you love reggae music, and if you love reggae music, you love reality," Innocent said.

"My long-term goals are to keep going, to spread my music."

Les Exodus is now working on re-recording its demonstration tracks in hopes of signing a contract with Shanachie Records. Innocent said the label was looking for a better production than they created on their original demo.

He said the band recorded its current five-song tape in one day on a 16-track machine. Next time around, it will be using a 24-track machine and spending more time in the studio to add "more sounds" and a bit more polish to the final product, he said.

In January, they plan to temporarily relocate to California in hopes of finding a wider audience, but they will continue to play shows in the Midwest until then, he said.

Innocent said he made sure the band set up three shows this time in Lincoln because of the reception of its last visit.

"We were very impressed with the turnout (last time)," he said. "It showed that (Lincolniters) love reggae. They supported the band very heavily."

Les Exodus will be performing three sets each night starting at 9 p.m. and will appear on "Reggae Fever" on Friday evening on KRNU 90.3 FM.
