

Roskens announces plan to resign from agency on Thursday

From Staff Reports

Former University of Nebraska President Ronald Roskens will officially resign Thursday from his position as administrator of the U.S. Agency for International Development, an office spokesman said.

Roskens, who announced his resignation earlier this month, will be succeeded by Scott Spangler, the associate administrator for AID operations.

Spangler probably will remain as administrator of AID until President-elect Bill Clinton's inauguration in January, the spokesman said.

The Senate confirmed Roskens as AID administrator on March 8, 1990. He was sworn in on March 22, 1990.

Roskens has announced his plans to return to Omaha to head the new office of Action International.

The new group will support the work of the InterAction Council, a group of former chiefs of staff who meet annually to consider major global issues.

Graduating seniors required to attend loan presentation

From Staff Reports

Students who are receiving degrees from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln in December must fulfill exit requirements at the Office of Scholarships and Financial Aid.

Federal regulations require all graduating students to attend an exit presentation if they have received one of the following forms of assistance: Stafford Loan, Perkins Loan or a Supplemental Loan for Students.

Sessions start today at 12:30 p.m. and 4 p.m. at the East Campus Union, and Thursday and Friday at 12:30 p.m. and 4 p.m. at the Nebraska Union. Room locations will be posted.

The sessions will focus on loan repayment options, deferment provisions, grace periods and consequences of default. Students' failure to attend a session will result in their diploma being held.

ASUN senator hears dead week problems

By Mindy L. Leiter

Staff Reporter

If ASUN Sen. Leslie Strong gets her way, students will get a break during dead week to prepare themselves for finals.

During dead week, which starts Monday and lasts through Dec. 11, professors are prohibited from giving most exams and assigning papers, she said.

Strong, who represents the College of Journalism in ASUN, will handle questions and complaints about dead week.

She will review complaints and contact professors about any violations.

"Basically I will look into the complaint and see if a violation has been committed," she said. "If it has, then I will contact the professor to correct it. If not, I will contact the student and tell them why there is no violation."

Strong said her evaluation of the complaints would be based on the Association of Students of the University of Nebraska policy.

The following rules are included in the ASUN Dead Week policy:

- Tests may not be given, with the exception of library, practical or self-paced exams.

- No projects, papers or speeches may be due during dead week that are not assigned in writing by at least the eighth week of the semester.

- Final exams for full semester classes are to be given only at the regularly scheduled time or another time during finals week that is mutually agreeable to all concerned.

- Students who have questions or complaints about dead week can pick up complaint forms at the ASUN office or relay them to Dave Temple,

“ I like to try and do things on a one-on-one basis between students and professors. Most of the time, things get resolved that way. ”

Strong said most student complaints were about exams given during dead week.

"Someone will be having a test during dead week without the consent of the entire class," she said, "and that's a violation."

Strong said she had received no complaints about dead week violations yet, but she expected they would begin filtering in next week.

"Unfortunately, it's kind of after the fact," she said. "I can't fix it this semester, but I can contact the professors and tell them not to repeat the violation next semester"

ASUN has placed classified ads in the Daily Nebraskan and the Scarlet to inform people about dead week, she said.

Temple said he also would be happy to work out dead week concerns with students and faculty members.

Temple said he usually tried to get students to talk to their professors about their questions.

"I like to try and do things on a one-on-one basis between students and professors," he said. "Most of the time, things get resolved that way."
