

B-ball bickering ends in battle of sexes

By Beaujo Nixon Finnly
Staff Reporter

The blood and loose skin can be washed from the court, but the horrific memories will live forever in the annals of Nebraska basketball history.

NUL Police were called Wednesday to the Bobfather Devaney Sports Center to stop a brawl between men's basketball coach Dan Knee and women's coach Angela Buck.

Details of the attack, pieced together from eye-witness accounts, paint an ugly picture. The fight allegedly occurred while Buck was hanging a banner commemorating the women's NCAA first-round victory, a 81-58 thumping of the San Diego Toreros, on the center scoreboard.

Allegedly as Buck hung the banner, commemorating the first NCAA in Cornhumper basketball history, Knee entered the gym yelling a series of incomprehensible expletives in his thick Brooklyn accent.

Knee then tackled Buck and placed her in a head-lock screaming, "We could have beaten San Diego. Why don't you get Jennings to try to block out Cliff Reed?"

Buck broke the head-lock and countered Knee's maneuver by grinding her high heels into his groin. Buck then was reported as saying: "Why don't you get your boys to play some defense? Then you may actually be able to win a game in the postseason."

"Send Andy Woolrich over, I'm sure Meg Ann Whydsena has got some time to teach him some D."

Knee then screamed something about playing with Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, asked for a steak sandwich with heavy mayo and passed out. Knee reportedly is in fair condition at Bryan Carr Memorial Hospital.

Buck was treated at the hospital and asked to remain overnight for observation, but refused because the hospital did not offer plaid nightgowns and nurses refused to allow an entourage, headed by Dr. Bobmother Hibner and Terry Becker, to shoot hoops in the lobby.

Several minor skirmishes also precipitated from the first one.

Wednesday night, reportedly, senior guard Sarah Ringer went to the home of men's player Bruce Chewbacca to challenge him to a knife fight. Chewbacca declined the offer and proceeded to dive to the floor for an imaginary loose ball. Ringer was outspoken about the incident and her perception of Chewbacca.

"I'm the real blue-collar," Ringer said. "I got a bum ankle and floor burn from the NCAAs. Bruce ain't got nothing but sore eyes from watchin' Sam Crawford."

Senior women's captain Rissa Taylor down played the rivalry with the men but said she thought the women could really shoot the rock.

The source of the confrontation could have been spurred on by comments made by Buck. In a press conference, Buck was reported as saying she thought Knee's ties looked something like after-birth and that the new warm-ups worn by the Humpers must have really scared New Mexican State.

Knee responded with claims that the Humpers lost because Polish Rifle Piatkowski and Terry Ratchet had sprained ankles after tripping on holes left in the court from Buck's high heels.

Buck countered by calling the men's team "a bunch of wussies."

Buck later apologized for the statements and even said she thought Knee was cuter than Noe Mo Iba and Martini Massengil put together.

Trav Haystack/DH

Why pay athletes?

Bald volleyball coach's pranks leave AD Burned

By Squiggly Down Under

NUL volleyball coach Terry Petite has been found to be in athletic department violation for having an additional job while shunning his coaching duties.

According to NUL athletic director Bill Burned, Petite has been seen touring numerous Lincoln comedy clubs with his one-man act entitled "I'm Not Too Petite to be Funny."

In a press conference called by Burned, he played a tape of Petite's act, which opened with Petite talking about the opponents his team must face this season.

"They're a solid team with talented players and good coaching — I guess the latter is what differentiates them from my team," said Petite, with peals of laughter being heard in the background.

Burned, who learned of the infraction from NUL baseball coach Sandy Johnnders, had a look of disgust on his face as the tape continued.

Next, Petite discussed how tough it can be if a bus breaks down on the way to a match.

"The bus doesn't play — but I am looking to recruit a healthy minivan for its quickness from the backcourt," Petite said.

Later in the act, Petite joked about how his team draws so many loyal fans to watch volleyball.

"These aren't people who just came over from the football stadium, these are true volleyball fans — but isn't it ironic that the arena triples its size after the final gun sounds from the football field?" said Petite, who could barely say the last joke without laughing himself.

Petite, dressed in his usual jogging outfit with that special comic's touch of not wearing a shirt underneath, capped his nightly performance with a remark that seemed to bring down the roof.

"When I compare my teams from over the years, which is what I often like to do, it amazes me how much talent some of my players have had — just think what they could have done if they had a head coach whose intelligence could equal his ego," he said.

Chump vs. Booby — phone sex prompts boxing match

By Beaujo Nixon Finnly
Staff reporter

It will be called the Combat at the Capitol.

On Saturday Night, State Audaciator "Jumping" John Breastlow will fight Ernie Chumpbers for the Nebraska oh-so-light weight championship.

Breastlow enters the boxing match undefeated with a perfect record of 15-0.

Chumpbers comes into the contest with a record of 322-1 with his only loss coming at the hands of Shirley Marsh after she defeated him in the Supreme Court chambers in Washington D.C., 17 years ago.

Despite his impressive record, Breastlow said this would be the biggest fight of his career.

"Nobody fights like Chumpbers," Breastlow said. "He's very sharp but I'm most afraid of his low blows."

Several opponents of Chumpbers in the past have complained that he sucker punches and hits below the belt.

Chumpbers dismissed these charges saying his past opponents simply weren't fit to fight him.

"Hey if you can't take heat, get out of the kitchen," Chumpbers said. "They are making excuses for losing. If you can't take the smell, get off the toilet. I mean, if you can't take the mellowness, get off the Quaaludes. I'm saying, if you can't cross-dress, don't go into the lingerie store."

Chumpbers went on to make several more analogies.

Bad blood has been the theme of the fight since the two men allegedly participated in a yelling match at the state capital and made cruel jokes against one another.

The fight reportedly began with Breastlow asking to borrow Chumpbers phone records so he could "copy down the phone sex numbers."

Chumpbers refused the request and Breastlow called him a "selfish, selfish, selfish man who gets his jollies at the expense of the tax-payers."

Chumpbers responded by calling Breastlow a "whiny, Jewish dork." Chumpbers then covered his eyes claiming that he was blinded by the glare from Breastlow's shiny, bald head.

Breastlow proceeded to throw down his papers and challenged Chumpbers to "bring it on."

Chumpbers agreed, but before any punches were thrown Daily Harassment reporter C.H.U.D Green stepped in to stop the fight and the two parties returned to their respective offices.

Green said he wouldn't have interfered, but he was forced to because he needed an interview with Sen. Eric D-W-I-II, who wanted to referee the dispute.

Following the altercation, Don King flew in from Las Vegas and inked both men to a winner-take-all fight.

King said the boxing match might be the best he ever promoted.

"Chumpbers has got the experience," King said. "But if Breastlow loses, he said he'd audit Chumpbers. That should make the fight really messy."

"Only in America, baby."

The fight will take place on the Unicameral floor. Seats still are available.

Students rejoice as AD reverses field on boot

NUL students rallied today in front of Broyhill Fountain in an apparent celebration of not being booted out of Memorial Mausoleum by Athletic Director Billy Burned.

The students, led by the Cornhumper cheerleaders, chanted "The endzones are ours!"

Burned had attempted to move the students to a parking lot outside the stadium in front of big-screen television, but apparently gave in to the endzone proposal when a group of football players threatened to report him to either their boss at Park Place or the Cretin athletic director.

Also, a group of Cornhumper band members sat vigil at Burned's office, alternately dumping cups of vomit on each other "in remembrance of old times."

Burned, piped in through speakerphone to the rally, said that "if the damn bandies want to get puked on, they might as well do it inside our stadium."

Nebraska coach Tom Osburned said the endzone seats will give the Cornhumpers an advantage over opponents.

"When those teams get down close to scoring, our students will drown them out," Osburned said. "If not, their quarterback can look out for the flying cups... who knows what'll be in them?"

Robin Trimarky Mark and The Funky Bunch/DH

A group of Cornhumper fanatics get cozy in front of Broyhill Fountain to celebrate their move to the endzones of Memorial Mausoleum.