

"The sign said Standing Room Only. Halfway through the third act, my date started acting like a flamingo. Must have been her stiletto heels.

So there she is standing on one foot when I realized my Birkenstocks were beautiful.

It must be the way they support my feet because I was ready for the standing ovation."

Falkland

"It made me realize I really enjoyed being on the team," Falkland said. "I've had some good times — I didn't want to end it that way."

Falkland said the break "got me hungry again."

He proved that on Saturday with a straight-set singles win against Drake that proved crucial in the Huskers 4-3 victory over the Bulldogs.

Speculation around the tennis team was that there might have been added tension between Falkland and McDermott over Falkland's desire to play at No. 1 singles.

Senior Matthias Mueller is Nebraska's current No. 1 singles player.

Falkland made school history when he beat the No. 2 ranked singles player in the country earlier in the season, making his opponent from Northern Arizona the highest-ranked player to ever lose to a Husker.

Falkland said that was an example of why he should have been given the opportunity to compete at the top singles spot.

"I was really disappointed about that," he said. "I wasn't claiming to be the No. 1 player, but I thought I should have had the chance to play No. 1."

Mueller has struggled in some of his singles matches, but McDermott said he's not ready to change the lineup.

"It's just like Coach Osborne — you don't take Tommie Frazier out because he had a bad game against Iowa State; you've got to look at consistency," McDermott said.

McDermott, who is in his 13th year at the helm of Nebraska, said some of the team's controversies could be beneficial.

"Hopefully, it will make us a better team," he said. "I think it can when you can handle adversity."

Falkland said no matter what, he was going to try to do what he could to help the Huskers in their strive for the conference title.

"All you can do is give 100 percent. As long as I give 100 percent, then I'm happy," he said.

McDermott said he hoped he would see Falkland play up to his capabilities now that the Big Eight season is to begin.

"He's a good tennis player when he gives 100 percent," McDermott said. "He ends up winning matches that are important, and maybe that can rub off on the other players."

Inside linebacker Mike Anderson said he thought the new formation would be successful.

"It's more of an offensive defense," he said. "We'll be a more aggressive defense."

McBride said he thought the linebacker position would be the strength of the defense next season.

"I think our linebacker position will be strong," he said. "We have experienced players coming back."

Anderson, a two-year starter, will be one the leaders of the defensive squad, McBride said.

"(Anderson) is a very critical player," he said. "He's one of the best linebackers we've had around here."

The Huskers, who lost five defensive starters from last year's squad, also will spend spring practice finding replacements.

"Every year we lose seniors and we have to find players to fill the spots," McBride said. "But we have some players who have a lot of experience."

Anderson said he thought there was plenty of talent in the younger players.

"We'll miss some of the guys, but you can always rebuild," he said. "We should be all right."

McBride said he was concerned about the lack of depth among the defensive backs.

The Huskers lost safeties Tyrone Byrd and Steve Carmer along with cornerback Kenny Wilhite from last year's team.

But McBride said he thought there were several athletes who would be able to fill in.

Toby Wright, Kareem Moss, Troy Dumas and Barron Miles should be able to gain experience this spring and join returning starter John Reece in the secondary, he said.

McBride said he also thought spring practice was beneficial because it gave the defense a chance to practice against an option offense.

One of the defense's problems last season, McBride said, was losing focus on the rushing teams.

McBride said one of the reasons for last season's loss to Iowa State was the defense's unfamiliarity with rushing teams.

One of his goals for the season is to keep his team focused and ready to play against all offensive sets.

"We spent most of the year last year playing against one-back sets," he said. "We're going to prepare for (rushing) sets all season long this year."

Anderson said he hoped the defense would be able to improve on its intensity and concentration.

"We need to maintain our intensity all the time," Anderson said.

"(Practice) has been pretty good so far," he said. "Everyone wants to work hard and have a good season."
