will. "Take listeners to the source."
"Experiencing different kinds of music might bring people to a better understanding," he said. "Maybe ... world peace. I don't know."

"I hope it might make people think differently about things. Like, what is hip? What's square?"

The band really has two new albums out, one in Japan called "Kikosumaru Meets Brave Combo: Ondo Saves the World."

This album features a highly politicized version of classical ondo style—with one tune about AIDS and another, on Japanese politics, called "Godzilla."

The songs were composed in Japan. Then, "We took 'em and mutated 'em" Barnes said, into something that can be neither East nor West.

But that's what Brave Combo does—and they do it extremely well.

The band played here last year and sparked great enthusiasm, particularly with a band of Lincoln musicians now performing as The Fungis.

"Lincoln has been a good town for us," Barnes said.

And Brave Combo has certainly been good to us.

leaving ink behind. The skin heals over the punctures and the tattoo becomes permanent.

The needles cause some pain, and physical discomfort is another factor prospective customers should consider.

"It hurt," Ewoldt said. "It wasn't excruciating, though. After awhile, it gets to where it's kind of a numbing feeling. It's just an annoying pain."

Cost is another consideration. The price varies with each size and design requested, Ley said.

Large artwork, such as scenic work or large animals, starts at approximately $50. Roses, hearts, fraternity letters and other smaller designs average about $30.

Smaller tattoos, though less expensive, are discouraged, Ley said.

"The smaller the tattoo, the less we can do with it," Ley said. "They tend to lose their beauty and shape sooner."

Custom tattoos are available for a minimal design fee and encouraged by both artists.

"The stuff on the walls is something a lot of people will be getting," Ley said. "With so many people getting tattoos, there's a chance that something you pick off the wall has been done at least once or twice on somebody else."

"Custom tattoos are nice because you'll be the only one walking around with it," he said.

Soto said customers should make sure the tattoo they pick is one they really like and can live with. The medical procedure for removing a tattoo is very expensive.

"I doubt I'll ever have my tattoo taken off," Ewoldt said. "I guess it scars just as bad to remove it. I'm proud of it now."
