

Aid continues amid tremors

KILLARI, India — The Indian army cracked down on looting in the country's earthquake-stricken southwest on Sunday, taking control of police and civilian authorities and blocking outsiders from shattered villages.

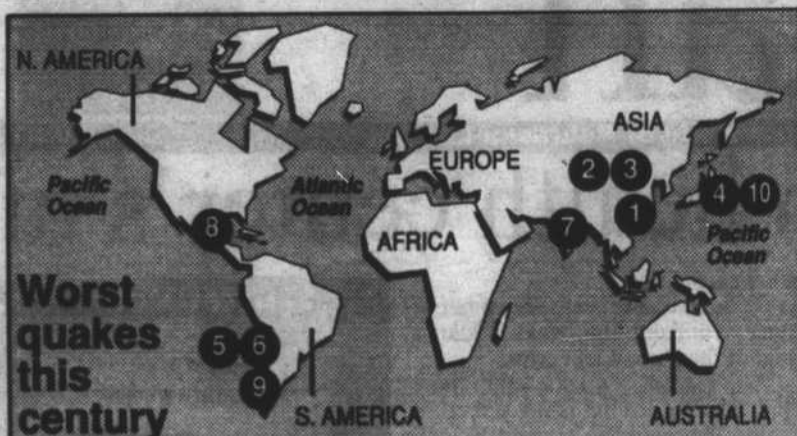

Tremors continued to shudder through Maharashtra state, where as many as 30,000 people died in Thursday's earthquake.

In the days following the disaster, looters have slipped into villages in the guise of volunteers, stripping corpses of jewelry and wrecked homes of any valuables that could be carried away, relief workers said.

"I'm not allowing anyone today to work in the villages unless they are cleared by the army," said Col. S.K. Joshi, head of the relief effort for Killari and four surrounding villages.

Dozens of volunteer groups have arrived in Maharashtra state, bringing food, drinking water and temporary shelters to earthquake victims. But many remote villages off the main roads remain without aid.

Survivors swarmed relief vans whenever they stopped. Without organized distribution, the weak went hungry.

Worst quakes this century

"There has been a lack of coordination in the relief operation," said Brig. Pritam Singh, relief commander for the Latur district, one of the hard-est-hit areas. "But this can happen anywhere, anytime, even in the United States."

Six die in latest round of violence in Moscow

MOSCOW — Thousands of screaming hard-line protesters hurling rocks and bottles at fleeing police broke the government's siege of parliament and seized other key installations Sunday in the worst political violence in Moscow since the Bolshevik Revolution.

President Boris Yeltsin declared a state of emergency in Moscow, giving police wide power to crack down on unrest if they could, and appealed to people not to aid the protest. "We call upon your common sense and responsibility for the fate of your children," a government statement said.

Protesters overwhelmed riot police in vicious street fighting and smashed their way into the headquarters of the Moscow city government and the headquarters of ITAR-Tass, the Russian news agency. They attacked the country's main television complex with rocket-propelled grenades as government commandos and paratroopers fought back. Three TV channels went off the air.

At least six people were killed, including four soldiers, city officials said. Dozens were injured, some when they were run over by trucks driven by protesters to break through lines of riot police.

Hard-line lawmakers urged their triumphant followers to seize other installations and take control of the government.

"We have to take the Kremlin," parliament speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov told the Russian parliament.

The chaos dramatically deepened the political crisis that began Sept. 21 when Yeltsin dissolved parliament and ordered parliamentary elections in a bid to end his power struggle with hard-line lawmakers. About 100 lawmakers with hundreds of armed supporters have been holed up in the parliament building, refusing Yeltsin's order to disband.

Braves win division title after Giants' loss

ATLANTA — After winning game No. 104, the Braves waited and watched. And, finally, on the last day of the best pennant race in years, the San Francisco Giants cracked.

The Braves won their third straight NL West title Sunday — but it didn't happen until three hours after their 5-3 victory over the Colorado Rockies.

With players watching on big-screen television in the trainers' room, and about 8,000 fans watching on the scoreboard television in Atlanta-Fulton-County Stadium, the title finally came when the Los Angeles Dodgers beat the Giants 12-1 a continent away. Then, after a marathon stretch drive that baseball will never forget, the celebration finally began.

Atlanta and San Francisco began the day in a tie for first, only the second time since divisional play began in 1969 that teams were even going into the final day.

Atlanta players, who left their bags packed in the clubhouse for a possible flight to San Francisco on Sunday night, congratulated each other after the game but it was a quiet celebration.

Western Nebraska hit by youth violence

SCOTTSBUFF — Communities in western and central Nebraska are not immune to youth violence and crime more often expected in big cities.

Summer burglaries at Scottsbluff businesses and a Sept. 25 assault in Mitchell were attributed by authorities to youths aged 13-16.

In the Scottsbluff area in the last 30 days, there have been six reports of shots being fired at homes. No one has been hurt, but bullets or shell casings from small-caliber automatic pistols and shotguns have been recovered from three scenes, authorities said.

The Nebraska Crime Commission

reported that in 1992, youth violence increased by 11 percent. Teens aged 13 to 15 were responsible for two of every three crimes committed by youths.

"Moms are dumping out of the big cities and they are bringing their kids with them," Scottsbluff Police Chief Jim Livingston said.

The success of metropolitan gang task forces also has sent urban gang members to seek the quiet rural life.

"They are forcing people to move out to get the pressure off them," Scottsbluff Detective Scotty Crawford said. "Consequently, they are turning up in smaller communities."
