Litter increase could cost UNL

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln cleanup crews are asking everyone to be tidier. People who ignore waste containers could be costing the university big money, said Bud Dasenbrock, director of Landscape Services. Littering is up 1 percent this year, which could pose a problem, he said. Dasenbrock said a survey was done several years ago about littering on campus. Results showed littering cost the university 2 cents for every wrapper, cigarette butt and other item of trash improperly discarded. The total cost was more than $35,000 a year to have Landscape Services pick up the litter. If littering continues to pile up, Dasenbrock said, cleanup costs could rise as well. Dasenbrock said the increase in litter could be related to the new no-smoking policies enforced in all university buildings this year. Dasenbrock said more cigarette waste containers were placed around campus and that more will be added. About 400 waste containers are on campus. Landscape services will add more containers where students think they are needed, Dasenbrock said. Picking up litter on both City and East Campuses takes 7,000 hours each school year, which is 6 percent of Landscape Services employees' time, Dasenbrock said. These figures do not include "accidental" littering, such as papers blowing off trucks or wind bringing litter onto the campus, Dasenbrock said. Football Saturdays can bring a tremendous amount of litter onto the campus. Kirby Baird, city landscape manager of Landscape Services, said it took five or six employees three hours each to pick up the litter around Memorial Stadium. Big Red litter has been a problem even after 50 to 60 extra trash containers were set up. On the Monday after a football game, the entire department must clean up what has been overlooked, Baird said.

UNL gets ready to take licking, keep on kicking

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln will be one of 300 schools participating in the fifth annual Timex Fitness Week Monday through Oct. 24. The week provides students with a variety of activities, said Vicki Highstreet, coordinator of fitness and instructional programming at the Campus Recreational Center. Highstreet said the activities would include aerobics classes, canoeing, a weight room Triathlon, family fitness and body fat analysis. An important part of Fitness Week, Highstreet said, was to make people aware of the fitness activities available to families and students with disabilities.

Thursday. All 300 schools will participate in the class from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. Highstreet said Timex Fitness Week was endorsed by the National Intramural-Recreational Sports Association. Sponsor prizes, including Timex sports watches and T-shirts and free samples of Ocean Spray and Listerine, will be distributed at various events. The fitness classes are free for UNL faculty and students. "We want to show what we are doing that a lot of people don't realize."

"It gets them involved to see what they really want to do," Highstreet said. "It gets them into other parts of the building. I think that it has been a real positive thing." Rock climbing and other aerobics classes will be held on East Campus. Highstreet said "The World's Largest Aerobics Class" also would be
