The judicial board didn't have the legal right to impose some of the sanctions, he said, but fraternity representatives agreed to the sanctions in order to save the chapter.

"We're trying to be respectful of their rights as an independent national organization," he said.

The university has provided chapter trustees with one application, not an alumnus, for the residence assistant position. The board hopes to interview, hire and have the R.A. move into the house within the next few weeks, Friedman said.

The exact job description for the R.A. has not been agreed upon, but the individual would probably be responsible for enforcing the Student Code of Conduct and judicial board sanctions.

Friedman said Fiji alumni also were working toward reducing the fraternity membership. Alumni will interview all undergraduate members this weekend, he said.

Griesen said that despite the delays, he was satisfied with the fraternity's efforts to comply with the sanctions.

"I'd liked to have had it move a little faster," he said, "but they are proceeding in good faith."

chemistry department, said he thought the vision statement was too broad and did not include many specific goals for the university to work toward.

"For example, there is no statement about where we want to be in terms of undergraduate teaching institutions ... or in terms of research," Song said.

Song said the plan did not contain goals that would distinguish the University of Nebraska-Lincoln from other institutions.

Spanier said the vision statement was merely the beginning of a "top-down, bottom-up" goal-planning process. The specifics, he said, would be the "bottom-up" part, and would rise from individual departments.

"Some of the specifics will come up from the deans who talk about programs," Spanier said.

A series of planning sessions in February and March will address ways to achieve specific goals and help the university begin planning for 1995, Spanier said.

Spanier said part of that planning would be to prioritize the more than 50 goals on the list.

The job of the manager will be to advise the advertising staff in an attempt to boost revenue. The position is scheduled to be filled this spring.

Senior Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Joan Leitzel also mentioned upcoming events for the university.

Coming attractions include a partnership between UNL and the Gallup corporation.

UNL also was identified as one of four public research universities to participate in a networking project.

The American Association for Higher Education has chosen UNL's agriculture leadership, math, English and political science departments to associate with comparable departments in three other universities, Leitzel said.

buildings.

The Association of Students of the University of Nebraska will have a working session with Parking Services today, Benes said.

McDowell said short-term meters are also being placed by residence halls to accommodate students and employees loading or unloading their cars.

In addition, temporary parking permits, ranging from one day to one week in duration can now be purchased at the East Campus Union, McDowell said.

Before, those needing a temporary permit had to come to City Campus, McDowell said, even if all their business was on East Campus.
