Sarajevans walk streets unafraid

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — After six days of peace, Sarajevo's survivors are doing the unthinkable.

At one of the city's deadliest intersections on snow-caked Sniper Alley, three war-maimed men pushed a legless comrade in a wheelchair.

At any other time in the Bosnian capital's 22-month-old siege, they would have been halted by Serb snipers in surrounding skyscrapers or gunners perched on Mount Trebevic looming over southern Sarajevo.

Now, the streets, even the most dangerous, are full. Instead of running across perilous open spaces, people walk.

Despite heavy snowfall, Sarajevans are out visiting friends they have not seen for months, scouring stores for food or merely out for a stroll towing children on sleds.

They want to believe peace is at hand, but after countless disappointments they hardly dare.

"I'm walking down this street for the first time in two years," said Nusret Pleho, as he pushed Omer Velic in a wheelchair.

Pleho and two friends, all veterans of the war who were wounded in 1992, walked with the aid of artificial limbs.

they would be empty within a second," she said.

Bojanovic works in a store across town in the ravaged Turkish bazaar quarter. She was working in the Markale market until it was hit Feb. 5 by a mortar.

A friend was among the 68 killed. Bosnian Serb television showed the body lying on the ground and claimed it was a dummy placed by the Bosnians who staged the attack, Bojanovic said.

Using the threat of NATO airstrikes against Serbian positions, Rose is trying to get Serb guns off the surrounding hills or under U.N. control. The United Nations has started placing peacekeepers on sensitive confrontation lines in and around the city.

Rose wants to quickly restore electricity and water supplies. "Once the lights go on, life will be transformed" and people will start lobbying their leaders for peace, not more war, he said.

These are the cornerstones for making Sarajevo a U.N. protectorate. If Rose succeeds, his scheme could be used on other war-weary cities such as Mostar.

They all were on a 3-mile trip for meager food rations from an organization for wounded veterans.

"We have been hostages for two years," said Pleho. "It's difficult to feel safe, we don't feel safe, we can't feel safe here."

A cease-fire arranged by the U.N. commander in Bosnia, Lt. Gen. Sir Michael Rose, took effect Thursday and has brought six days of peace. But Sarajevans still depend on scarce food aid to survive. There is little or no heat in their homes, where plastic sheeting covers most windows.

"The problem is we can't remember what a normal life is," says shop worker Senada Bojanovic. "We've all gone a bit crazy."

"The streets are full now, but all it would take is for one shell to fall and

Second U.S. skier strikes Olympic gold

LILLEHAMMER, Norway (AP) — Golden again.

Ending a 10-year Olympic drought with a vengeance, U.S. skiers struck gold Tuesday for the second time in three days when dark horse Diann Roffe-Steinrotter won the women's super-G race.

It was a sensational way for the Americans to get back on their feet and onto the medals podium after a slip and a slide one day earlier iced two of their biggest Winter Games stars, Dan Jansen and Duncan Kennedy.

Donna Weinbrecht took a step toward another gold medal in the women's freestyle skiing by advancing to Wednesday's finals.

In hockey, the United States scored goals 1 1/2 minutes apart late in the third period to salvage a 3-3 tie with Slovakia. It was the second tie in two Olympic games for the Americans, and the first time 1984 that the U.S. team failed to win at least one of its first two games.

Roffe-Steinrotter took the silver in the giant slalom at Albertville in 1992. But like Tommy Moe, who got the U.S. skiers off to a blazing start with his victory in the men's downhill on Sunday, Roffe-Steinrotter was not a favorite in the super-G, which is a cross between downhill and giant slalom.

"It's like a dream," said Roffe-Steinrotter, who had never finished higher than fourth in a super-G race.

The alpine golds are the United States' only two medals; the Russians, with eight medals, and the Norwegians, with five, are the leaders.
