Center.
"I can even see a point where we could diagnose patients throughout the state (through satellite and interactive technology)," Smith said.

Kilgore said $92,000 was being spent to renovate the space in Mabel Lee Hall, and $170,000 in high-tech equipment has been purchased for the center.

The project was partially funded with an initial $73,000 grant from the University Foundation matched by a $70,000 discount on equipment for the center, Kilgore said.

Kerrey said a combination of grants from the National Science Foundation and from computer companies such as Apple also helped fund the media center.

Doug Gale, UNL computing resources director, said the academic affairs office and the Computing Resource Center also had contributed funds to the ongoing project.

Gale would not estimate the total amount of funding the media center would receive.

Spanier said the new technology could be used in a variety of academic disciplines, including physics, music, theater, teaching and pathology.

UNL, he said, will be the hub of multimedia technologies to be shared with schools and communities across the state.

Spanier said UNL joined a strong group of universities, such as Cornell, Princeton, Georgia Tech and Penn State, that are participating in the New Media Centers Initiative.

"We are in great company," he said.

Benes to veto CFA budget denial of Lied; committee will send suggestions to users

By Matthew Waite
Senior Reporter

The Committee for Fees Allocation was told Tuesday night that ASUN President Keith Benes had vetoed a measure to deny the Lied Center for Performing Arts a budget increase.

Marlene Beyke, an advisor for CFA, said Benes wanted the Lied Center to get the increase. She said his veto would have to be brought to the floor at the Association of Students of the University of Nebraska meeting by one of the senators.

The senate will meet tonight in the Nebraska Union where the veto will be discussed.

The committee also discussed sending letters to all student fee users suggesting improvements in budget presentations and operation.

Suggestions ranged from including lottery tickets in the Nebraska Unions to providing the committee with a chart of past increases.

CFA member Brendan Bussmann suggested lottery tickets be available in the unions.

"We have a lottery, we're stuck with it," he said. "Since we're losing all our money to this university, maybe we could have a chance to win some back."

Jennifer Cusick said she would like to see all fee users chart increases and decreases in their budgets for the past 10 years. After some discussion, CFA decided to include the fee user chart, operating budgets and staff budget increases and decreases.

For the University Program Council, CFA recommended that both past and current officers present UPC's budget. Current UPC president Lia Jensen had taken office only a short time before their CFA appearance and was unable to answer some of the committee's questions.

The committee also asked UPC to better explain its budget, after some members were confused by some terminology.

For the Daily Nebraskan, the committee wanted the newspaper to provide a detailed and accurate reason for any increases.

The committee suggested better communication between the newspaper and the Nebraska Printing Company, the business contracted to print the Daily Nebraskan. It also wanted better communication between the committee and the newspaper.

The committee also asked the fee users to submit recommendations for improvements in CFA. The committee asked that suggestions be submitted by the end of the semester.
