Protests continue as election nears

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP)—The government and the ANC laid the groundwork Tuesday for sending troops to the volatile Zulu-dominated Natal province if a peace summit fails to quell political violence.

Such a move would severely undercut Zulu leader Mangosuthu Buthelezi, who has vowed to oppose elections next month as a threat to Zulu sovereignty and autonomy.

Tensions showed no sign of subsiding a day after 53 people died in fierce clashes in and around Johannesburg, triggered by a Zulu march protesting South Africa's first all-race election.

Unidentified gunmen fired at the African National Congress headquarters, where ANC security guards killed nine Zulu protesters Monday. No one was injured in Tuesday's shootout, but the clash underscored the volatile situation before the April 26-28 election, which is expected to bring the ANC to power.

ANC supporters and rival Zulus also fought Tuesday in the Soweto black township outside Johannesburg, and at least one person was wounded, witnesses said.

The government rescheduled its planned peace summit until next week after Zulu leaders rejected emergency talks this week with ANC leader Nelson Mandela and President F.W. de Klerk.

The proposed summit would address the escalating political violence as well as demands by Zulu nationalists for an autonomous state after the election.

In snubbing the invitation, Buthelezi, leader of the Zulu-based Inkatha Freedom Party, described Monday's bloodshed as the beginning of "a final struggle to the finish between the ANC and the Zulu nation."

His nephew, Zulu King Goodwill Zwelethini, also refused talks this week but did not flatly rule out a summit. He said his people needed time to bury their dead and allow their anger over Monday's shootings to subside.

In Pretoria, the Transitional Executive Council ordered the drafting of regulations needed to declare a state of emergency in Natal province, which also includes the autonomous KwaZulu homeland led by Buthelezi.

Newsweek admits error, may apologize to first lady

WASHINGTON (AP) — Newsweek magazine may apologize to the White House for an article saying Hillary Rodham Clinton did not put up any of her own money to make just under $100,000 in the cattle futures market — but not until the first lady says just how much she did invest.

Editors of the magazine said there was a "misunderstanding" between one of its reporters and a law professor enlisted by the White House to vouch for the tax returns the Clintons released last week.

In the April 4 edition that appeared on newsstands Monday, Newsweek said it was told by Professor Marvin A. Chirelstein of the Columbia University Law School that Mrs. Clinton did not invest any money of her own in the cattle futures.

Ann McDaniel, the magazine's chief of correspondents, said that after discussing the article with the author, chief economics writer Rich Thomas, and Chirelstein, the magazine acknowledged that the article was based on a misunderstanding.

"We now accept Mr. Chirelstein's statement that he never saw the underlying documents ... and thus had no expertise to make the judgments that he is quoted as making in the magazine," McDaniel said.

The White House distributed a statement from Chirelstein calling the Newsweek article "false and irresponsible."

Chirelstein subsequently told The Associated Press that he had no knowledge of whether Mrs. Clinton put up any of her own money in the commodity trading because he was given no documentation concerning that portion of their tax returns.

Although he was one of the "experts" brought by the Clinton's personal lawyer to the White House to discuss the Clinton's 1978 and 1979 tax returns, Chirelstein said the only underlying documentation he was provided related directly to Whitewater-related tax deductions the Clinton's had taken.
