New ANUS prez Davis will move show to Lickin

From the Association BenchPress

NEW YORK - The recount is in. Davis Letterpeople is moving to Lickin as the new ANUS student council president at the University of No-Learning.

ANUS president Candy Loudly's election was declared invalid last week after it was revealed he paid ANUS selection fixer Stark Liars to say he won. Liars still is babbling in the ANUS office about the arrangement.

Letterpeople said the main factor that made him decide to move to Lickin and take the job as ANUS president was the ANUS senate. Letterpeople said the senators would serve as a ready talent pool for the old "stupid pet tricks" segment of his show Letterpeople also said the student council's name - ANUS heavily influenced his decision.

He is currently compiling top 10 lists to use in his Late, Late, Late Show's April Fool's Day debut in Lickin. He said the lists would cover topics such as "The top 10 responses of Nebraska football players after they have been arrested" and "The top 10 real things ANUS does." Letterpeople said he was having a hard time completing the second list.

Not all elements of Letterpeople's show will make the trip to the heartland, however. Bandleader and sidekick Bald Wafer has decided to remain in New Yuck. Letterpeople has asked ANUS first do-nothing Trendy Stoole to stay on and take Wafer's place.

Since Stoole doesn't have any band experience, Letterpeople said Stoole's main job as sidekick would be to fetch water and say "Gilooly" and "Buttafuoco" on command.

"From what I understand, that's what he does now anyway," Letterpeople said. "Bark, dog.

Letterpeople said he would be adding some new skits to his show when it moved to Lickin. Included in the new offerings will be Letterpeople dropping in on ANUS meetings and sections of Dan Knee's press conferences unedited.

With those guys, who needs writers?" Letterpeople asked.

But Letterpeople stressed that he would take his job as ANUS president seriously.

"I can't wait for that free Orangy Bowl trip," he said.

Secret society snobs students

Theta Newt Teflon, a secret society of geek elites at NUL, reportedly had to cancel their Thursday meeting because they couldn't find a room large enough to hold their big fat egos.

A high-ranking TNT officer, who refused to give his name and muttered something about being too ticklish, said the failure to find a room made him feel "really poopy."

"DAMMIT!" he sputtered in all capital letters. "I mean, hell, you spend he went into spasms. all that time and energy climbing up on pedestals, kissing butt till your lips are all pruny, stepping on toes, dodging libel lawyers, and everything else that goes along with being superior ...

and then this happens.
"Ooooooo ... Well, at least I know the solution: an anonymous newsletter. Nothing solves a problem on this campus like a few words from sophomoric minds.

Suddenly, in his rage, his tongue flapping like a resume in the breeze,

"ME!" he shouted, grasping desperately for anything even resembling head swelled up to the size of an ANUS president's beer gut. "ME! МЕМЕМЕМЕМЕМЕМЕМЕМЕ MEMEMEMEEEEEEE ...

Several of his TNT brothers ran to his aid, but they all screeched to a halt, crying out in pain after scraping their noses on the ceiling.

Wobble said the new plan was developed for a number of reasons, including safety, environmental concerns, an opportunity to exercise the "jumbo power" of the panel and encourage campus fitness.

Slim Hullaton, outdoor recreation coordinator with Compost Re-creation, said he whole heartily supported the plan.

With the dismount plan, he said, the center will see a rapid hike in physical fitness interest.

"I've always seen NUL as a bunch of flabby bellies," he said. "This is going to force all of those out of shape gas guzzlers into the weight room.

Hullaton, expecting more than capacity crowds at the rec center, said he already had contacted administration officials for use of the new NGorge phone system. Those wanting to get in shape will have to pre-register for time slots on a first-come, first-serve

Like MeJack, transportation corrector, said while no maps or rules would be posted concerning the new plan, he didn't think there would be any problems beyond the first couple

"Sure it seems a little confusing at first," MeJack said. "But from my experience, after you've slapped them (drivers) with a couple of hefty fines, well, it ought to clear things up in a Candy Loudly, ANUS president-select, was the first to be caught driving in the red zone.

Loudly, whose party has been found guilty of numerous ANUS election violations, including offering candy to strange children, denied any intent to defy the plan.

"I did not willfully break the rules," Lumpy said. "I don't see why this is such a big deal. There will be a fine levied, and I'll pay it."
Wobble said there would be no forums for university personnel or student input or reaction to the plan.

"It's a done deal," Wobble said. There's a few quirks, sure, but nothing that can't be worked out.

Wobble said some quirks that hadn't been resolved included placing handles on the sides of internal and inter-campus busing for better handling in the dismount zone and how to accommodate "pushers" into the upcoming parking garage.

Members also shocked NUL students with cattle prods to round students up and move them towards the polling sites.

In addition, they tore down CAB-BAGE and RESIDUE signs and replaced them with signs promoting Loudly saying, "Vote Loudly. Heyhe even has Cheeserson's first name.' In his defense, Loudly said his camp panicked when they heard students really didn't give a rat's patootie and weren't voting. "What can I say? We freaked," Loudly said. "I knew then that I was going to have to carry at least five, maybe six whole percent of the student body to get elected.

The commission couldn't hand down any bigger fines, Liars said, because bullhorns and cattle prods aren't specifically mentioned in the selection guidelines.

"To be perfectly honest, I'm not really sure what the rules say," he "But if I did, I'd follow them and I'd take them very seriously.

Besides, Liars said, everyone knew that Loudly and his VICIOUS cohorts were hand-picked to replace outgoing ANUS president Keith Vanish.

"I don't see why we just don't give to them," Liars said. "You don't think that a progressive dude like (RESIDUE's) J.B. Hollow could have run ANUS, do you?

Hollow, who also attended the meeting, pointed out he wouldn't have been awarded the ANUS presidency if Loudly would have been disqualified.

"You guys all forget that I only got nine votes," Hollow said as he got up to leave.

CABBAGE's ticket of Matt Christler and Blat Finkman would have been given the ANUS presidency had the violations been bad enough.

Christler expressed relief when he found out that Loudly would remain as president.

"Whew," Christler said. So did all the NUL students.

With the violations behind them, Loudly said he would focus on real issues that affected real students. Namely, issues concerning his constituents — all of whom are members of ANUS.

"I really, really can't wait to get my new nameplate," Loudly said. "We'll look so professional! At 45 bucks apiece, they're the best ones around. Better than the ones the Bored of Rejects use. You bet your sweet arse!"

'I like to see the staff have a little fun," he said. "Good form."

Spaniel said if he had known the two were planning to drink that Friday, he would have asked them to have a few cocktails with him before they left the office.

"Staffs that drink together stink together," he said. "I was a little disappointed that I wasn't invited.

Spaniel said he would use his influence to make sure Greaser and Candyson were dealt with lightly by the Prejudicial Bored.

"Twenty lashings with a wet noodle ought to do the trick," he said.

The two also might be required to help remove concrete chunks from the parking lot north of the union. The lot is being turned into pinktriangle space to enhance the aesthetics of campus.

That punishment especially is suiting, Spaniel said.

"Pinktriangle space is a place where all students, staff and faculty members can come together to get loopy," he said. "That way, we can keep alco-hol out of the geek houses."

Spaniel said he didn't know if the prejudicial bored would follow his advice, but threatened to force them to drink Jagermeister shots if they refused.

Spaniel already has use his influence to insist the Prejudicial Bored meet early on Friday to hear the case against the administrators.

"If those two boozing buddies want to hit the bottle again Friday night, I'd hate for the hearing to prevent them from getting an early start.'
