the university and the Lincoln community, Blake said.

"It was deeply personal to a whole lot of people," she said. "Having a memorial to Candi would be a life-affirming thing."

Blake said the university should remember Harms for her effect on safety and women's issues in the community.

Those involved with the project are Andrew Loudon and Keith Benes of the Association of Students of the University of Nebraska; Blake; James Griesen, UNL vice chancellor for student affairs; and the student who thought of the idea.

Blake said ideas for the memorial had ranged from a tree with a plaque to a bench dedicated to Harms' memory.

Other ideas include a small statue and a retaining wall built into the side of a grassy knoll, similar to the Vietnam War Memorial in Washington, D.C., Blake said.

The group is looking into the retaining wall idea, Blake said. Estimates put the price tag at $10,000 to $15,000.

Blake said the idea must pass the Aesthetics Review Committee, which meets April 7 to discuss the issue.

Loudon is planning to appoint an ASUN steering committee this week to start fund-raising for the project, Blake said.

during seven years of service in the Army.

"It comes down to the bottom line of whether people trust you or not," he said. "The better they know you, the better off you are in obtaining the funding support."

Helmuth said he would use these skills of originality and human communication in Nebraska.

During his first three months in Lincoln, Helmuth has spent his time making contacts and gathering information about industry in the state and region and about university faculty.

"My days are typically pretty busy," he said.

But the Nebraska concept of "busy" is what attracted him to the state and the job of associate vice chancellor of research.

Meetings at 2 a.m., seven-day work weeks and 300 proposal-writing projects a year as a consultant take up all his energy, he said.

"That gets a little tiring after a while," he said.

"I had no life."

In Nebraska, with his wife Judith, he has time to do some of his own research into the outdoors.

"Since I was a little tyke, I've enjoyed Mother Nature, and I certainly can do lots of that where we live," he said.

Helmuth said he enjoyed the coyotes, beaver, pheasants and occasional bald eagle that dwelt near his home, just outside of Lincoln.

And there's even room here for his kilt, said Helmuth, who recently donned the item for a birthday party.
