Student faces arson charges

From Staff Reports

A University of Nebraska-Lincoln student faces first-degree arson charges after a Thursday morning incident at Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity, 1433 R St.

Justin Anderson, an undeclared freshman and ATO member, is accused of lighting a piece of paper and throwing it down a stairwell of the fraternity.

UNL Police Sgt. Bill Manning said that while nothing caught fire, smoke from the paper caused the fire alarm to go off, bringing firetrucks to the scene around 2:30 a.m.

Anderson refused to talk to police to explain his alleged actions, Manning said.

The act is considered first-degree arson because it happened in a living unit and the building was occupied. However, because no one was injured and there was no damage, the charge could be amended, Manning said.

The charge is a Class II felony carrying a maximum of 50 years imprisonment. The minimum sentence is one year in prison.

Bike theft rash hits campus

From Staff Reports

Four bikes were stolen from the University of Nebraska-Lincoln City Campus in a 2 1/2 hour period Tuesday night. Losses totaled more than $1,900.

Wednesday night, another bike theft pushed that total to more than $2,250.

UNL Police Sgt. Bill Manning said the number of thefts was unusual, and so far, police had no leads.

"The most we ever have is generally one or two (bikes taken a day)," Manning said. "During the year, occasionally, we have days like that."

Police reported bikes taken from Brace Lab, Manter Hall, Nebraska Hall, Love Library and Pound Hall.

Manning said police had not determined if the thefts were related.

business.

Tadysak, who has a degree in business management, said he hoped to obtain a job in a few years working in the office for the company that sponsors the tour.

He said he wanted an office job to add some stability to his personal life while staying in the promotional tour business.

David Alexander worked as a retail stockbroker with Drexal Burnham in New York before he started working on promotional tours.

Alexander, who works with several different tours, said he had no dislikes about the job. He said the job had no stress and was a lot of fun.

He also said he met a lot of people and saw a lot of the country.

Several of the workers listed travel as an advantage, as well as a disadvantage, to the job.

John Moran, who ran the trivia tent, said he joined the tour because it was a good opportunity to see the country and save money. Moran said meals were his only major expense.

Moran said he liked living on the road, living in hotels, going out to eat and meeting college students.

Josh Procaccini, who was in charge of the basketball tent, said he joined the tour partly because he liked the idea of seeing other parts of the country.

"Living in hotels, someone else always makes your bed," he said.

However, Procaccini admitted that not being able to go home for three months at a time was something he disliked about the job.

Tadysak said the job interested him because each place was a little different, and he had a chance to meet different people.

While Tadysak said he didn't see too many differences in students from different regions, Wilson said there were definite differences.

Wilson said West Coast students seemed to be more relaxed and laid back, perhaps because of the warm weather.

However, he said the East Coast seemed to have a hard-working atmosphere. He said there seemed to be a lot of wealth on the East Coast, demonstrated by students' dress and the cars they drove.

The students in the South, Wilson said, seemed to be unfocused and wanting to leave to visit other parts of the country.

He said the Midwest, in contrast to other regions, contained a lot of variety in student appearance and attitudes.

Wilson said students at UNL seemed to be friendly, curious and eager to participate in the tour.

The same 13 men travel together for nine months, but all agreed that they got along well.

Although most of the workers are going to return next year, Moran is not.

Moran said he was planning to take further classes in film.

"I'm real glad to have done it. I have no regrets."

Endacott

Two Sidney jurors interviewed by the Daily Nebraskan this week said contact with Endacott did not affect their decision. Doug Smith and Janet Volkmer, two of the 12 jurors, said their decisions were made with an open mind.

"There is absolutely no connection between that prayer and the trial," Smith said. "I based my decision on evidence, and I am comfortable with the decision I made."

But a Lincoln attorney, who requested to remain anonymous, said the judge's contact put the entire Bjorklund case in jeopardy.

"The tragedy here is this was a slam-dunk case. It was a slam-dunk conviction and a slam-dunk death sentence. And now it is fatally flawed and it's going to make the legal system look bad," he said. "It's just a tragedy."

The attorney said that at worst, the entire trial could start over.

"The defendant is guaranteed a free and independent jury," he said. "By saying a prayer with them and joining with them, the judge crossed that line."

Helvie could not be reached for comment Thursday.

get involved in," he said.

Like any basketball game, there was a lot of fast-paced action. Both teams showed quickness, agility and athletic ability. And both teams appeared to enjoy themselves on the court.

Chad Kozak, a junior business administration major, said playing for the Rolling Storm in the game was a worthwhile experience.

"I think we need to do this more often," he said. "I had fun, and I think (the celebrities) did, too. This was something I couldn't do in high school."

Terrance Badgett, a forward for the Husker basketball team, said he felt the game served a good purpose.

"It's a whole different type of game. I came to meet some of the players, and just to support the event," he said.

About 75 people came to see the game, mostly to see what wheelchair basketball was all about. Jeni Reichmuth, a senior pre-physical therapy major, was one of the spectators.

"I've heard about wheelchair basketball before, but I've never seen it," she said. "I just thought it'd be interesting."
