A CONTEMPORARY PRESENTATION

Carlin to perform at Orpheum

From Staff Reports

Faster than a speeding Scud missile, stronger than vodka and able to scare small children in a single bout, it's comedian George Carlin and his "Void Where Prohibited" show.

From disc jockey to stand-up comedian to author to film and television actor, Carlin has spread his caustic wit across five decades.

His most recent success, "The George Carlin Show," a weekly sitcom on Fox, put Carlin into the television lineup. The show will reappear for 13 episodes during the winter of 1994.

In 1956, a 19 year-old Carlin started his career as a disc jockey at KJOE in Shreveport, La. In the early '60s, Carlin worked as a stand-up in nightclubs across the nation developing his uncanny sense of bizarre humor.

Through the '60s and '70s Carlin's humor changed with the times; however, it never lost its sting as Carlin became part of the social "counterculture," stepping off the beaten path.

"Void Where Prohibited" is testimony to Carlin's growing penchant for bringing the nasty things in society into a different light.

Carlin will be performing at Omaha's Orpheum Theater on Friday at 8 p.m. with special guest Dennis Blair. Tickets are $19.75. All seats reserved.

This week's new videos

"Intersection" — A man (Richard Gere) who is about to die has flashbacks on key moments of his life, cumulating with a choice between returning to his wife (Sharon Stone) or running off with his newfound love Olivia (Lolita Davidovich).

The plot is solid, but the acting is so wooden that you expect splinters to grow from the performers' heads. Take a walk in the park instead.

"My Girl 2" — If you rent this flick, have a bottle of Listerine handy to wipe the taste of it out of your mouth. Vada (Anna Chlumsky from the original) is still growing up, and is facing all the typical problems of typical teenagers.

Ho-hum. Go alphabetize your pasta.

"Lightning Jack" — The release of this on video shows that lightning (unfortunately) sometimes does strike twice.

This one struck in the theaters to bore audiences everywhere, and now it is coming to plague your homes. Paul Hogan plays a cowboy-type Australian outlaw trying to make a name for himself through a series of misadventures.

For a hilarious western-comedy, rent "Blazing Saddles".

"The Ref" — At last! A movie that doesn't require disinfecting or exorcising the VCR afterwards! Denis Leary ("Judgment Night") plays a burglar who ends up taking the world's most dysfunctional family hostage. Leary's brand of humor shines here, and the movie is quite a hoot.

Check it out.
