Daily Nebraskan Page8 Funding may obstruct Spanier's goals

UNL officials praised the priori-ties set by Chancellor Graham Spanier in his State of the University Address, but they said funding might be an obstacle in achieving those goals.

James Griesen, vice chancellor for student affairs, said the university would face funding problems, such as budget constraints, in attaining Spanier's six goals.

The University of Nebraska-Lincoln must compete with many other state institutions for funding, he said. The competition will be especially tough in setting NU's 1996-97 budget, because the state may face a $96 million shortfall in state funds during the next two years.

ing these goals. She said the focus of some areas in Spanier's strategic plan would change if funding fell short. Charles Wilson, chairman of the University of Nebraska Board of Regents, said Spanier's vision for the university meshed with goals for the NU system. He said his plans for UNL were an integral part of the overall plan for the NU system.

But funding could be a problem if the predicted shortfall in state revenue occurs, he said.

"If that's true, there will be problems in funding the priorities as well as the university," Wilson said. Andrew Loudon, student regent and president of the Association of Students of the University of Nebras-ka, said he was pleased with the speech, plan for the university.

Loudon said it was unfortunate that one of the first places the Legislature would look to cover the estimated $96 million budget shortfall would be the NU budget.

Griesen said he agreed with Spanier's statements about ensuring a welcoming, positive climate for UNL students and enhancing the personal development of students by taking a stand against alcohol, hazing, drug abuse and hateful actions.

Griesen said Spanier's address accurately summarized the months of planning conducted by university officials and should lay out the master money, which has shrunk during the past 15 years.

"I can't say the planning process was easy, but it was absolutely worth the effort," he said. "If we are to manage our resources effectively, we must continue to improve the integration of budgeting and planning

In 1980, higher education constituted 27 percent of Nebraska's total budget, with UNL taking 11 percent of the state's budget. Now, higher education has only a 21 percent chunk of the state dollar, and UNL has only 9 percent.

'Higher education's piece of the pie is shrinking as mandated programs in human services and health care eat up more of the state's resources," Spanier said.

After the speech, Spanier said in an interview that a new budget process Smith developed would work for UNL and the NU system. Smith's plan collects all NU revenue in one fund and allocates money from it to

"It can only improve the pro-cess," he said. "What he (Smith) is doing over at central administration fits perfectly with what we are doing on campus.'
