

Wickedness

"I really liked the story. It seemed there were a lot of possibilities for audio exploration," he said.

Kirschner said he wanted to mold the sounds of a blizzard into a sonic metaphor so it wouldn't always be the sound of wind.

"I'm intrigued by trying to create a soundscape to evoke a blizzard of sound," he said.

He said his music could be a "blizzard of words" in which one sound was repeated and chopped up until it became unrecognizable.

Kirschner said he researched the music of the late 19th century in preparing for "Wickedness."

In one passage, a reference is made to a girl going to a party and dancing "quadrilles" — a precursor to the American square dance, he said.

"It was a popular form of entertainment. They used social orchestras — a few violins, a cello, a clarinet — that would play these quadrilles."

Most of the score is electronic, Kirschner said, accompanied by a live violinist and a mezzo soprano. He said he also would use different sound effects for wind, trains and animals.

"We're using digital sampling techniques to create a collage," he said. "So it's an electronic piece, but it's not electronic in the sense of synthesizers."

The producer

Lamphere's dream is coming true.

Her dream, the Wagon Train Project, was designed to be a catalyst for performing artists in Lincoln to interact with national artists to develop a project.

Cultivating Nebraska history through these performances was another one of Lamphere's objectives.

"Wickedness" fulfills all these objectives.

"It illustrates exactly what our strength areas are as an arts organization and our goals as a creative force," Lamphere said. "We're allowing artists to build a work and producing it with them."

The "icing on the cake," Lamphere said, is that the artists are taking part of Nebraska's culture and exploring and celebrating it.

Presenting "Wickedness" in Nebraska's central body, the State Capitol, is another bonus. When Lamphere received "Wickedness" from Lily, her old friend from New York, she was horrified.

"It was a really hard story. Some of the images of the children just blew me away," she said. "Having two children of my own," it was very powerful.

"I love Ron's use of language, and that's something (Lily has) really maintained in this piece. It's interwoven in different scenes."

The script adaptation, by Ann Arbor director Erika Block, will undergo further changes before "Wickedness" is premiered in New York next May.

"During this whole process, the artists really have a chance to fine-tune the production before it goes to New York," Lamphere said.

During the process, Lamphere said, "Wickedness" fulfilled another goal by drawing from resources within the community.

The production utilized the talents of several University of Nebraska-Lincoln students from the theater and dance departments.

Local ballet and country-western dancers will be in the production, as well as a local singer and violinist.

"These local artists really lend a certain perspective," Lamphere said.

Lamphere will videotape the performances on Friday and Saturday. When she attends the National Performance Network conference in New Orleans this December, she will present the tape with the hope that she can get the show booked across the country.

"It's our hope it will have a life beyond Lincoln and New York," she said.

The performances will be held in the State Capitol rotunda, underneath the mosaic depicting schoolteacher Minnie May Freeman leading her students to safety during the 1888 blizzard.

The premiere performance will be on Friday at noon. Additional performances will be that day at 4 p.m. and Saturday at noon and 3 p.m. Admission is free.

"Hattie Benedict woke up in a Lincoln hospital with sweet oil of spermaceti on her hands and lips, and weeks later a Kansas City surgeon amputated her feet with a polished silver hacksaw in the presence of his anatomy class. She was walking again by June, but she was attached to cork-and-iron shoes and she sighed and grunted with every step." — "Wickedness"

Good week to stay home with videos

By Gerry Beltz
Staff Reporter

It's an overall good week for new video releases!! There's comedy and adventure — something to please anyone and everyone. All new releases are available today.

"Naked Gun 33 1/3: The Final Insult" (PG) — It may have been the final entry for the "Naked Gun" movies, but it certainly wasn't an insult. But, three films is about as far as the series should be taken, because this one was starting to wear very thin.

For the third installment, our bumbling hero, Frank Drebin (Leslie Nielsen), has retired and married Jane (Priscilla Presley), now a successful lawyer. Also returning are George Kennedy and O.J. Simpson.

"Farewell My Concubine" (R) — This is quite a good film that didn't get a whole lot of time in the theaters.

In "Farewell My Concubine," the audience follows the triangle of love and lust between two performers of the Peking Opera and an ex-prostitute. This film was nominated for two Academy Awards: Best Cinematography and Best Foreign Film.

We're looking at good stuff here.

"The Snapper" (R) — O'Brien on his own! Colm Meany (Chief O'Brien from television's "Star Trek: Deep Space Nine") stars in this contemporary drama and does a wonderful job.

A working girl in present-day Dublin gets pregnant and refuses to name the father, and her dad (Meany) gets really upset with her.

More good stuff!

have been influenced by Mediterranean and Middle East dishes," he said.

The spinach yogurt scooped onto a pita chip was surprisingly delicious.

"I'm into food for fun," he said. "I want people to be able to dip into it."

Bread is served with every meal, and many of the dishes include a side salad.

Sepapur also has made a lot of structural and decorating changes to the restaurant.

"I put a partition up to break up the dining room and make it more comfortable and more cozy."

"I also changed the awnings to make them bright and more noticeable. I wanted to tone the atmosphere down a bit and make it a fun eating room."

"People can come in on a Monday night or a Friday night and get the same kind of feel."
