God, and He provides."

While Michael Woroniecki was drawing a crowd with his wooden cross and large banners, students involved in Chapter Summary Bible Study were setting up an open microphone on Broyhill Plaza.

"We had no idea that he was going to be here," David Mather, a junior geology major, said.

Chapter Summary had been on campus during the 1980s, Mather said, and then it disappeared for a while. This is the third year in a row that the group has met since it was reinstated.

Participants set up the microphone to make students aware of the group and to preach about Christ, Dave Zach of Hastings said.

Both Zach and Michael Woroniecki called for students to repent their sins and turn to Christ. But Woroniecki said joining a Bible study group was a similar "hypocrisy" to going to church.

Woroniecki told gatherers that they must turn away from organized religion and television evangelists and follow Christ on their own, as he had done.

After leaving Lincoln, Woroniecki said he planned to go to Omaha, Iowa and Minnesota. Even when winter comes, he said, he plans to keep preaching.

"It's frustrating; it's depressing," he said. But when he talks to one person who agrees, he said, "it's all worth it."

Lied director values student say

Student input will help shape the future relationship between the Lied Center and students, the new Lied Center director said at an ASUN meeting Wednesday night.

University Nebraska senators were needed to continue to enrich students' lives with the arts.

A key to maintaining student involvement in the arts, Marquis said, will be increased interaction with academic programs and additional activities in the Nebraska Union to introduce students to upcoming artists at the Lied Center.

"Hopefully, we can even increase student attendance and involvement in arts programs at the Lied," he said.

Marquis also commended the senate for using student fees to subsidize the Lied Center, keeping student ticket prices low.

"That's something not all universities have," he said. "It's very wise to be able to make those tickets accessible to students."

Andrew Loudon, ASUN president, said during his report that he would be serving on a committee created by the UNL Sociology Department that will review the university's policy regarding gun possession.

Loudon also reported to senators that the Engineering Executive Board was distributing a petition to engineering students to oppose the creation of a separate engineering college at the University of Nebraska at Omaha. The board would like to have 1,000 students sign the petition, he said.
