Husker gymnasts get chance to regroup at Columbus meet

Both the Nebraska men's and women's gymnastics teams will come together for a meet Saturday night at 7:30 against Ohio State in Columbus, Ohio.

The men's team continues its month-and-a-half road trip against No. 4 Ohio State.

The women's team is coming off of a first-place finish in the Masters Classic last Saturday, raising its record to 10-2.

Despite the Huskers' 10-2 record, women's coach Dan Kendig is still uncertain about his team.

"We're not sure who is going to be competing," Kendig said. "Meeting every week has been taxing on us. But we'll make good decisions and get some rest. I'm not sure what to expect, but we'll do well."

Kendig said the team's showing in the Masters Classic should carry forward into Saturday's meet.

"We would like to continue our consistency in the floor events," he said.

But Kendig said there was room for improvement.

"Last week we only reached our goal of 48 in two events," Kendig added. "We were close on the other two, but we'd like to do it in all of them."

The No. 3 men's team, up two spots in the rankings from a week ago, will go head-to-head with Ohio State, which finished as second runner-up at the NCAA Championships last year.

The Buckeyes are without sophomore standout Drew Durbin, who is academically ineligible. At the NCAA meet last April in Lincoln, Durbin helped Ohio State to a third-place finish behind Nebraska and Stanford.

Allen said the Huskers' health had improved from last week, when they scored 230.125 points in a losing effort against No. 1 New Mexico without sophomore Ryan McEwen, who hurt his neck, and junior Jason Christie, who hurt his wrist, at full strength.

Christie should be able to participate in five of six events against the Buckeyes, Allen said. McEwen, who landed on his head during his floor exercise routine against New Mexico, is back to full strength.

The Huskers expect Saturday's trip to Columbus to be the first of two visits this year. Ohio State is the host of the NCAA Championships April 20-22.

"It's good that we're going there now," he said. "When we host NCAAs, everybody tries to schedule us."

"Winning isn't that important right now. You can lose a meet and still do good. If we can pop off and go 227, that's going to help us."

Jack Frost may cancel baseball game

From Staff Reports

The Nebraska baseball team might be shut out for the first time this season.

Nebraska coach John Sanders said forecasts of cold temperatures and freezing rain or snow could force the Cornhuskers to cancel their scheduled game with Nebraska-Omaha at Buck Beltzer Field Sunday.

"If it's bad, we're not going to play," Sanders said. "We are going to wait and see what the weather is supposed to do, and then we are going to make a decision Friday."

The Huskers, 4-2, were hoping to use the Nebraska-Omaha game as a tuneup for Wednesday's game against Oklahoma at Norman, Okla.

Sunday's game was supposed to be the season opener for Nebraska-

Omaha, an NCAA Division II school.

But Sanders said if the Huskers were unable to play the Mavericks, it would not have a major effect on Nebraska's chances of defeating Oklahoma, the defending national champions.

"I don't think it's totally devastating or anything like that," Sanders said. "This early in the year, everybody is really enthusiastic about playing, and we will be ready."

loss at Kansas State Wednesday and fell to 4-9 in the Big Eight, tied for sixth place.

After suffering a 71-68 loss to Oklahoma Wednesday, the 19-9 Cyclones are 5-8 and fifth in the conference.

Even though a win over Nebraska Sunday would secure the fifth-place spot in the Big Eight and a very important 20th win, Hoiberg said the Cyclones were still on the bubble for the NCAA Tournament.

"Sunday is a must-win for us, definitely," Hoiberg said. "Then, I think we need to win at least one in the Big Eight Tournament to be in. If we don't win Sunday, that forces us to maybe get two at the tournament. I don't know what we need. I just know we need to beat Nebraska."

In the two teams' first meeting on Feb. 11, Hoiberg scored 20 points and hit a 3-pointer with a little more than a minute left in overtime to help the Cyclones to a 72-69 win.

Hoiberg said without that win, the teams' situations could be reversed—Nebraska on the bubble of the NCAA Tournament and Iowa State making National Invitational Tournament reservations.

"That was a very big game for us," Hoiberg said. "We had lost so many (four) in a row before, so beating Nebraska gave us some confidence. That was a key game because if we would have lost that, especially being at home, our confidence would have been gone. We might not even be in a position to go to the NCAAs."

Saturday's Kansas-Oklahoma State game in Lawrence, Kan.

Husker coach Danny Nee said his team played well enough to win Wednesday, but the Wildcats' 58.3 percent second-half shooting and 3-point efficiency was too much for Nebraska to handle.

He said Nebraska probably should have looked to Boone more often in the second half. The 6-foot-6, 200-pounder from Salt Lake City made four straight 3-pointers in the first half and scored 11 of the Huskers' first 15 points.

But Boone's first points after half-time came on a 3-pointer with 4:55 to play. By that time, Kansas State had come from eight points down to take a five-point lead.

"He carried us," Nee said. "I thought we should have tried to get him the ball more. I could use three of him."

Boone said he didn't want to take opportunities away from the rest of the team by shooting too much.

"I was just taking what was coming," he said. "I wasn't forcing anything. They were just coming. Luckily, I hit them."

Nee said the Huskers were going to need to work on their composure in the final seconds of the game if they were going to have any success Sunday and in the Big Eight Tournament next week-end.

With 25.5 seconds remaining in the game Wednesday, Wildcat guard Elliot Hatcher hit a pair of free throws to put Kansas State up 74-70. Nebraska called a timeout to set up a play, but 14 seconds later, the Huskers had yet to get off a shot.

Boone then missed an off-balance 3-pointer from the left side.

"I just had to pick it up and shoot," Boone said. "I didn't know where the ball was. I didn't know where the basket was. Things like that just happen sometimes."
