

"The Rapture"
Siouxsie and the Banshees
Geffen Records
Grade: B+

"The Rapture" is like a trip backwards through the recording history of Siouxsie and the Banshees. The album begins with the pop sound of the band's recent work and transforms toward the end into the avant-garde punk sound of the band's original incarnation.

The first track, "O Baby," is a radio-friendly pop tune that would have been at home on the Banshees' last effort, "Superstition." It is a disappointing beginning for long-time fans of the band or for those who have heard Siouxsie's claims that this album will take a new direction.

The poppy introduction gives way to the eclectic Eastern-tinged sounds of "Stargazer." "Stargazer" calls to mind the Banshees' 1988 album "Peepshow" with its unearthly atmosphere and tones.

The album finally kicks into gear with "Not Forgotten." This track immediately calls to mind the band's Robert Smith period. "Not Forgotten" is an eerie gothic tune that captures the definitive Siouxsie sound. Her voice is never so powerful as when it moans like a choir of ghosts and howls like a moor full of banshees.

"The Double Life" pushes back even further into the band's avant-garde, experimental past. The song contains a spoken-word narrative full of psychological twists and back alleys. The music deepens the shadows of the daunting aural landscape with moody intonations and ethereal grooves.

The album closes with its finest track, "Love Out Me." This song returns the Banshees to their punk roots in the style of their 1976 debut, "The Lord's Prayer." Distorted guitars clash with tinkling synth as Siouxsie belts out a frantic and passionate vocal. "Love Out Me" is a real treat for any true Siouxsie fan who has lost faith from her recent pop aspirations.

Overall, "The Rapture" is a fun retrospective-sounding album, but it ends with one question: what sonic territory will Siouxsie explore next?

Unfold sleeper sofa for tired 'Hideaway'

By Gerry Beltz
Film Critic

Can we all say "tedious?" Webster's New World Dictionary defines "tedious" as "long and dull." Future editions should include the movie "Hideaway" as an example.

Director Brett Leonard ("The Lawnmower Man") tries again to bring mental imagery to the big screen, but this time he doesn't do anything very interesting.

Most of the special effects are brought on when Hatch Harrison (Jeff Goldblum) dies. Harrison is a mild-mannered antique dealer who drowns in a car accident, but his wife (Christine Lahti) and teen-age daughter (Alicia Silverstone) manage to survive.

Although he is clinically dead for more than an hour, Dr. Jonas Nyebern (Alfred Molina, "Maverick") uses a mysterious (or never explained) resuscitation formula to bring Hatch back to life.

But he's not alone... sort of. Hatch is now psychically connected to another man, who is a psychopathic murderer.

Hatch can see through the murderer's eyes, who in turn can see through Hatch's eyes, and the game of cat-and-mouse begins.

Nobody believes Hatch can "see" these things, not even his wife and daughter. However, since Hatch has been leading the police to a whole slew of crime scenes, they begin to suspect he committed all the crimes.

The Facts

Film: "Hideaway"
Stars: Jeff Goldblum, Christine Lahti, Alicia Silverstone
Director: Brett Leonard
Rating: R
Grade: D+
Five words: Psychic-type thriller with twist.

Oh, there's a big surprise! I think I'm going to have a heart attack and die from that surprise!!

This is where the plot should turn and flip, where the suspense that has been building throughout the movie should really get tense. But none of this happens.

There's nothing. There's only one plot twist, and it's not even that interesting.

Everyone in this film is guilty of overacting, with the exception of Silverstone, who shows all the acting ability of a side of beef. She gave a better performance in the Aeromsmith video "Crazy" than she did here.

Again, there's no suspense, and the ending is absolutely stupid. A great deal is never explained, such as the fact that these two guys seem to have an amazingly fast healing rate. And how did they get connected in the first place?

The special effects are pretty good, but they are too few and far between to make the movie worth seeing.

Kusi Taki

The chafchas are made from sheep and llama hooves. The bombo is made with goatskin and cow fur. And, Pereda said, the back of the charango is usually made out of armadillo or turtle shells or condor skeletons.

Rios-Pohirieth, who plays all the instruments, said he made the wind instruments himself. Many of the other instruments are shipped from South America, he said, but sometimes it takes a while for them to reach Lincoln.

Kusi Taki also performs without sheet music, band member David Jacobo said.

"We do all our stuff from memory," Jacobo said. "Chances are if we play something today, we'll play it a little differently a month from now."

Band members agreed that one of the band's best performances was a recent show for an elementary school.

"We were playing for a group of kids between kindergarten and fifth-grade," Jacobo said, "and they just got up and started dancing."

"The professors' jaws dropped because of how the kids all got up and started screaming and dancing."

Percussionist Tara Wilcox said, "It's much better when people can get up and dance."

Members of Kusi Taki don't just perform happy music. It's a happy band, Fritz said.

"I think the thing that is so special about this band is the friendships," Fritz said. "I hear a lot about how band members just hate each other, and can't stand each other at rehearsals."

"I always come out of performances and rehearsals feeling good."

Schuller

Schuller, who played in the New York Philharmonic for 42 years.

By the time Schuller was 11, he was already involved in music as a boy soprano with the St. Thomas (Episcopal) Choir School.

Schuller has known some of the true greats of music, York said.

"At the age of 16, he performed Shostakovich's Seventh Symphony with Arturo Toscanini and the NBC Symphony," he said.

Schuller was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for music last year for his work entitled, "Of Reminiscences and Reflections."

He has written several major books and his long list of awards includes more than 10 honorary doctorates.

Homestays in Rural Communities

This is a long week-end home stay in the farming communities in rural Nebraska. The students will be staying in the homes of the community people and spend three days and nights with them. There will be activities such as a welcome party and visitations in around the area to the jail, courthouse, and other interesting places. Leave at 5:00pm on March 17. Cost is $18 per person. Deadline: March 10.

Visit the Legislature

Nebraska is unique because it has a Unicameral legislature, the only one in the country. During the visit, we will have a rare opportunity to learn about this aspect of the American life, and understand the democratic system of the U.S. Each participant will receive a packet of materials containing information on the unicameral system. Date: Tuesday, March 21. Cost is $2 per person. Deadline March 10.

Lincoln Business Tour

Although Nebraska is an agricultural state, it also has a large variety of manufacturing, retail and high-tech businesses. The tours are supported by the Office of Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, and Rotary Club #14. Buses will leave from the north entrance of the City Union on Wednesday, March 22 at 8:00am. Registration fee is $5, includes lunch and transportation.

Trip to Grand Island

Grand Island is the third largest city in Nebraska. There are 3 major attractions which draw hundreds of people each year: 1) The sight of seeing more than half million Sandhill Cranes migrating through Grand Island area each spring; 2) The famous Stuhr Museum of early pioneers and Native Americans and 3) Thoroughbred horse racing at Fonner Park. We will visit all these attractions. Date: Sunday, March 26 at 7:00am. Cost: $5 (without lunch) $10 (with lunch). Deadline: Wednesday, March 15, 1995.
