MUSIC REVEALS

Jimi Hendrix
"Band of Gypsies"
Capitol Records
Grade: B+

"Band of Gypsies" captures the 1969 New Year's Eve performance of Jimi Hendrix's short-lived new band at the Fillmore East. Hendrix fronts a band with drummer Buddy Miles and bassist Billy Cox.

Most of the chemistry of this band comes from the interplay between Hendrix and Miles, who also sings and adds his own songs to the playlist. This lineup is much different from the Experience because Miles threatens to take up as much of the limelight as Hendrix. At times, Hendrix seems unsure how to react to Miles' presence.

The recording begins with "Who Knows," an unreleased Hendrix composition. It is a field-holler blues with Miles answering Hendrix's vocals line for line. Not only does Miles compete with the Hendrix vocals, he sings back the Hendrix blues solo note for note.

Hendrix moves onto "Machine Gun" after Miles' filibuster. This performance exchanges the rage and distorted effects of the studio version for the flow funk R&B sound that dominates this album.

On two Miles' compositions,

"Changes" and "We Gotta Live Together," Hendrix takes the back seat. He accents the band with great taste and subtlety, but gone are the days of the transcendental guitar visionary of the Experience.

The tone of the entire album seems to be closer to Miles' musical vision than Hendrix's. The tension that Miles and Hendrix exude on stage creates interesting dynamics, but also awkward moments where the audience is waiting to see which star will come out on top.

"Band of Gypsies" is not classic Hendrix, but it is an illuminating look at what could have been.

Aesthetic conference said 'absolute success'
From Staff Reports

The National Aesthetic Education Conference was held this past weekend on the UNL campus. Kit Voorhees, director for Arts Are Basic—the conference host, said it was "an absolute success."

"Everything went extremely well," she said.

One major focus for this year's meeting was global aesthetics, she said.

"We explored, within our approach to aesthetic education, specific cultural arts of the world," she said.

Also called successes: a performance by Kahil El'Zabar, a jazz and African percussionist; and an exhibition of "Your Move," a work of theater, music commissioned by Arts Are Basic, and dance.

"We had wonderful discussions after each performance session," she said.
