Newcomer to play Union tonight

By Joel Strauch
Senior Reporter

Contemporary folk singer Carrie Newcomer has played at Carnegie Hall and with Bonnie Raitt, but she's a newcomer to Lincoln. "I like going to new places," Newcomer said. "I'm all excited to play in Lincoln."

Newcomer is touring in support of her latest release, "Bird or the Wing," and will play at Nebraska Union tonight at 7:30. Tickets for the University Program Council-sponsored concert are free for students and $3 for others.

"Everything's going great with the album," she said. "Good reviews are coming back in, it's doing well on radio — I couldn't be any happier."

Newcomer has always been a creative person and has looked for outlets for her creativity, she said.

"I started out in visual art; that's what I went to school for," she said. "But after college, music was calling louder."

"I love making music. There's a space and a need for real heart music."

Newcomer sometimes brings along a band, her Dorkestra, but usually she plays alone, armed with just her songs, w.t and amazing guitar skill.

"It just depends on the show," she said. "This time, it's just me."

It's difficult to label the type of music she plays, Newcomer said, but she is definitely a crossover artist. "The fact that I get up there with just my guitar and play makes it folk, but I'm a very contemporary artist as well."

The songs Newcomer plays are self-written and the lyrics are strongly influenced by her life experiences.

"I write about my political thoughts, my spiritual feelings, my daughter, even my dog."

Although her songs are self-expressive, Newcomer said, she tries not to make them just journal writing.

"I try to have a communication process going on. If I write it well, it's not just my story, it's your story." This type of interaction between singer and audience makes a lot of connections — and that's what Newcomer loves about performing.

"I can tell when I'm connecting by people's reactions," she said. "When you can see it in people's eyes, or see lovers holding hands, you know you've struck a chord."

Newcomer said her favorite reaction was at a show in Texas.

"When the show was over, a woman came up to me with tears in her eyes and gave me a big hug. She said, 'Thanks, that really helped' and then walked away."
