UNL police help keep campus safe

By Catherine Blalock
Staff Reporter

The numbers are down, but campus safety is still a concern at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

UNL Police Sgt. Bill Manning said the total number of crimes on the UNL campus have decreased in the last year.

Crimes against individuals have decreased, he said, but at the same time crimes against property have increased.

Students can protect their property by remembering to lock their car doors and keeping valuables out of site, he said.

All parking lots are patrolled 24 hours a day to prevent car vandalism and theft; but it is impossible to keep an eye on everything at once, Manning said.

In addition, the residence halls are patrolled by community officers, Cather Residence Hall Director Joel Johnson said.

"Students need to remember that they are living in a housing unit. They need to remember to lock their doors if they leave for any reason and escort anyone onto the floor," he said.

Another crime preventer are the blue phones located on both campuses that can be used for any emergency a student has.

But students need to realize that the blue phones aren't just for trivial use.

"What you think is an emergency may not be an emergency to me," Manning said.

Students may use the phones to report an accident, or to ask for assistance if they have run out of gas, locked their keys in their cars or are lost, he said.

If a student locks their keys in their car, someone will be sent out to open it, he said.

Even students living off campus can receive help if the problem is directed back to the campus or to the student.

Lincoln Police will be called in if the situation requires it, UNL Police Chief Cauble said.

The UNL police department also provides assistance to students who are victims of crimes through the Victim Service Program.

Lisa Cauble, Victim Services Coordinator, said services are available to discuss options about reporting a crime, transportation to court, filing protection orders and assisting with a professor if a student is absent from class due to being a victim.

Students can reach Lisa Cauble through the UNL Police Department.

Campus safety is also a concern of students.

Campus Watch, an organization similar to Neighborhood Watch, is scheduled to begin this fall.

Boon Lim Lee, a 25 year-old who graduated in May, has been working toward making Campus Watch a reality after the Oct. 17, 1993 beating of Boon Chung Ong, a UNL student from Malaysia.

"I think it will benefit the whole campus. We all need to watch out for each other," Lim said.

Student volunteers trained through the UNL police department will patrol the campus and report anything suspicious to the UNL police department, Chief Cauble said.

"Our goal is to provide assistance," he said.

The UNL police department is available 24 hours a day, seven days a week to help students.

While crimes have decreased on campus, crimes in Lincoln have increased by 5 percent in the last year, Lincoln Police Chief Tom Casady said.

In 1993 Lincoln ranked 34 out of 36 cities with a population of 150,000 to 250,000, for violent crimes.

"Living in a city of 200,000, people need to practice crime prevention," he said.
