Convention 'scoots' into Lincoln

By Wendy Thomas
Staff Reporter

This week's Cushman Club of America's annual convention at the State Fair Park has more than 1,000 antique scooter owners rolling into Lincoln.

Although it is the first time that many of them have visited Lincoln, it is not the first time that the scooters have been here, David Sabatka, Nebraska Cushman Club President, said.

The two-wheeled scooters—many of which resemble mo-peds—were built in Lincoln's Cushman Motor Works Plant from 1936 to 1965. Following World War II, the scooter's low price made it a primary source of transportation.

The meet, which will run through Saturday, marks the 30th anniversary of Cushman's final year of production.

The convention gives owners a chance to buy and sell parts, take driving lessons and test their riding skills, Sabatka said. Many scooters will be on display as well.

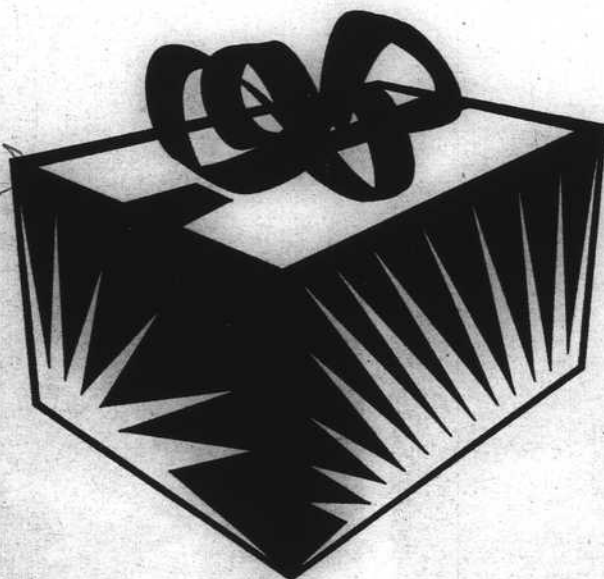

"We welcome the public to come and look," he said, "and if they have a scooter in their garage, we'll buy it from them."

The Museum of Nebraska History, 15th and P Streets, has also opened a temporary exhibit to honor the scooters. The summer exhibit includes advertising photographs and the Airborne Scooter, a model dropped by parachutes for Airborne troops during World War II.

"Few people realize there are many Nebraska products which are synonymous with development of the American culture," said Gail Potter, Senior Museum Curator for the Nebraska State Historical Society. "The Cushman Motor Scooter is one of those products."
