Reunion to shut doors

By Becky Keasling
Staff Reporter

A University hangout will be closing on an undecided date this summer.

By September, local businesses such as The Plump Tomato Pizza Company, George's Great Gyros, Eggroll Palace, Hairtech Salon, and Spellbound Books and Games will be forced to leave the Reunion Foodcourt.

Several years ago, the Reunion, located at 905 N. 16th St., was also home to a copy center, a sports store, and an Amigos restaurant.

"The rumor is that the owner of the Reunion is trying to bargain," George Kholousi, owner of George's Great Gyros, said.

"I've heard that they are trying to sell the building to the university. I've also heard that the Reunion will be changed into apartments."

It is true that the first floor of the Reunion could possibly be converted into residential units, David Hunter, president of State Title Services, said.

Hunter and the Hardy Building Corporation presently own the building.

If the building is not converted into apartments, the building could be sold to the university for $1.6 million.

"The university doesn't want to lose this place," Kholousi said. "It would be a convenient place if the university decided to expand its chemical engineering department."

Kholousi also owns another George's Great Gyros restaurant, located at 14th and O streets.

"When the Reunion closes, I am also planning to open a new sit-down restaurant with a mix of American, Middle Eastern, and Greek food," Kholousi said. "I am still looking for a good location and a good chef."

Spellbound Books and Games, another business in the Reunion, is also looking for a new location.

"It's a shame for this store. After the noon crowd, many students come to play games outside in the food court area. These are the people who come to our store," Spellbound employee Bob Moyer said.

"When we relocate, we will have to find a place that is big enough to handle the gamers."

The store is doing well at the university, and they hate to leave, Moyer said.

Although a date has not been set, the Reunion will definitely close its doors before the fall semester.
