Despite spring injury, Husker ready to play

By Todd Walkenhorst
Staff Reporter

An injury-filled spring has forced WILL linebacker Jamel Williams to begin his spring practices this fall.

Last spring, Williams missed practice while rehabilitating his right shoulder.

Williams said it was frustrating to miss spring practice, but the 6-foot, 195-pound junior has learned to deal with frustration.

Long before injuring his right shoulder, Williams had reconstructive surgery on both knees.

But the injuries have not ended Williams' hopes of starting for the Cornhuskers.

"I'm just trying to play the position and do what's best for the team and help them any way I can," Williams said.

Williams, a junior, is still completely healthy. Linebackers coach Craig Bohl said Williams nearly missed the scrimmage Aug. 13 because of another knee injury.

"It was questionable if he would be able to scrimmage," Bohl said. "He still has a slightly sprained knee."

In previous scrimmages, Bohl said that the injuries might have affected Williams' play.

"He was very tentative last spring," Bohl said, "and he was tentative last week."

Williams agreed. "Last week, I got hurt early," Williams said, "and I was playing on it the whole scrimmage, trying to tough it out."

Williams said that he knew the road to recovery would take time, but it still seemed to be going too slowly.

"The knee's coming along a little slower than expected," Williams said, "but it's feeling pretty good right now."

Williams may finally be back on track to compete for playing time after his performance in last week's scrim-

"I'm not content with where I am at now. I'll help out in any way I can, special teams or backup. I'd like to work into a starting position, but I'll play my role."

mage. "We were very pleased with his performance," Bohl said. "He exceeded any expectations that I had."

The lack of practice time has hurt Williams, so he has spent the fall trying to get back into the swing of things.

"It's going to take awhile to get back," Williams said. "It will be awhile to get the techniques and getting everything down. I have to work hard at it if I want to play this year."

Despite playing in 10 games last season, Williams is listed at fourth on the depth chart behind Ryan Terwilliger, Aaron Penland and Matt Aden.

"I'm taking a little more confidence with me this year," Williams said. "Last year I was real tentative, but this year I know more of what I am doing. Craig Bohl is a great coach and helping me out."

Williams said he hoped to make great improvements in his last two years at Nebraska.

"I'm not content with where I am at now," Williams said. "I'll help out in any way I can, special teams or backup. I'd like to work into a starting position, but I'll play my role."

Lincoln youth will take on Cornhusker soccer team

From Staff Reports

The Nebraska soccer team will play host to "Meet and Beat the Huskers" Tuesday at the Ethel S. Abbott Soccer Park Complex.

The Ethel S. Abbott Soccer Park Complex is located 1 1/2 miles north of Cornhusker Highway on 70th Street.

The event will allow Lincoln youth who are registered members of a soccer club to have pizza and soft drinks with the Cornhusker players.

Not only will the youth soccer players have dinner from 6:30 p.m. to 8:30 p.m., but they will get a chance to compete against Nebraska as well.

The Huskers open the season Thursday, Aug. 24 playing host to Queens University of Kingston, Ontario, at 7 p.m. at the Abbott Soccer Park Complex.

Nebraska begins regular-season play at home Sunday, Sept. 3 with a 7 p.m. contest against Creighton at the complex.

your job while you're hurt and the people who said you were the greatest ever will now say you should stay on the bench. They will say Nebraska is better without you. But the whole time, I want you to hug Brook every time he comes off the field and tell the press that he is phenomenal."

At the same time, I don't picture Osborne in Goodland, Kan., saying to Berringer, "Brook, you will battle every day in practice against a kid from a city in Florida, but you will always be behind him. When you're a junior, you will take over his job because he will get hurt and you will lead us in convincing fashion to seven straight wins. In the national championship Orange Bowl, you won't start because Tommie will be healthy. Tommie will win the game at the end and will once again be loved by everyone. This whole time, I want you to tell all the media that you love Frazier, and he deserves to win the Heisman Trophy."

It isn't surprising nor has it been hidden very well that they don't get along, but it just shouldn't matter.

Problems will arise when both of these players have lost their competitive spirits so much that neither of them cares who starts this season for the Huskers.

And that is the only problem. "I don't think it is affecting our team," Berringer said. "There are a lot of positions where guys are going to be competitive and don't really get along. I'm not saying that's the case at quarterback. It's just competitive."

"I don't think any players are asked to be best friends on the team. We go out to practice every day, and we're a team. That's all it boils down to."

And for the people who still think Berringer and Frazier need to room together, go on double-dates and visit the other's hometown for Nebraska to be successful, just look at last season. The attitudes were probably elevated to their highest peaks last season and each quarterback played at his top level on every play because he knew the other was looking over his shoulder.

The result was a 13-0 season, national championship, Big Eight championship and Nebraska's first bowl victory since 1987.

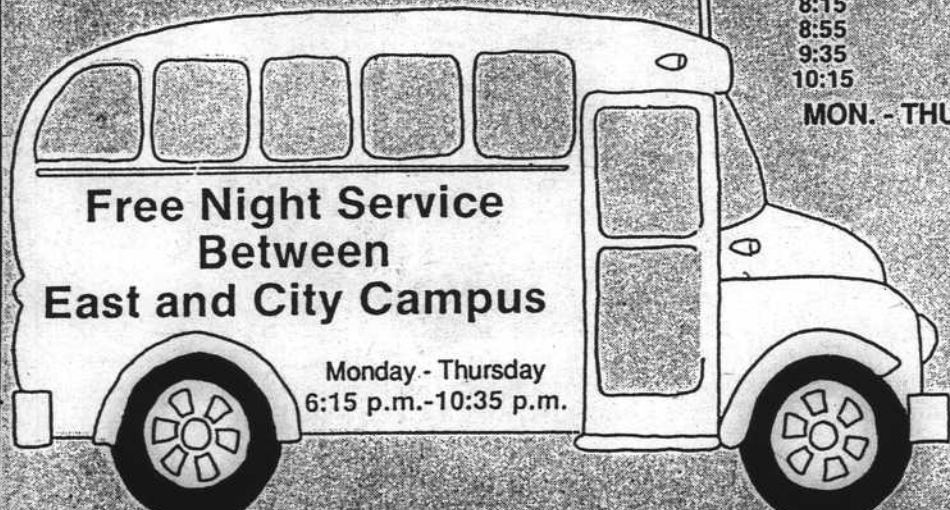

So why is it so imperative for Frazier and Berringer to sit down with a counselor and talk this thing out?

This should be last on Nebraska's list of things to work out before its opening game.

"It would be nice to put all this to rest and just talk football," Berringer said. "I guess that's not going to happen."

Unfortunately not.
