

Bagel bakery offers variety

By Gerry Beltz
Restaurant Critic

Bagel lovers have a new den to satisfy their desires: Bruegger's Bagel Bakery, which opened its doors Monday.

Tom Upton, district manager for Bruegger's, said the original Bruegger's opened in 1983 — when bagels first became all the rage — and the restaurant stuck around when fitness was a mainstay concern.

"Bruegger's was trying to change with the health-conscious individual," Upton said. "They really perfected the bagel to where it became something popular."

Nebraska outlets of Bruegger's are currently in a test market for Healthy Choice meats, including maple roasted ham and smoked turkey breast, and many of their cream cheeses are low-fat, Upton said.

Bruegger's offers 10 varieties of bagels, and all are made fresh daily right on site. The curious public and munching customers even can watch the bagels being made.

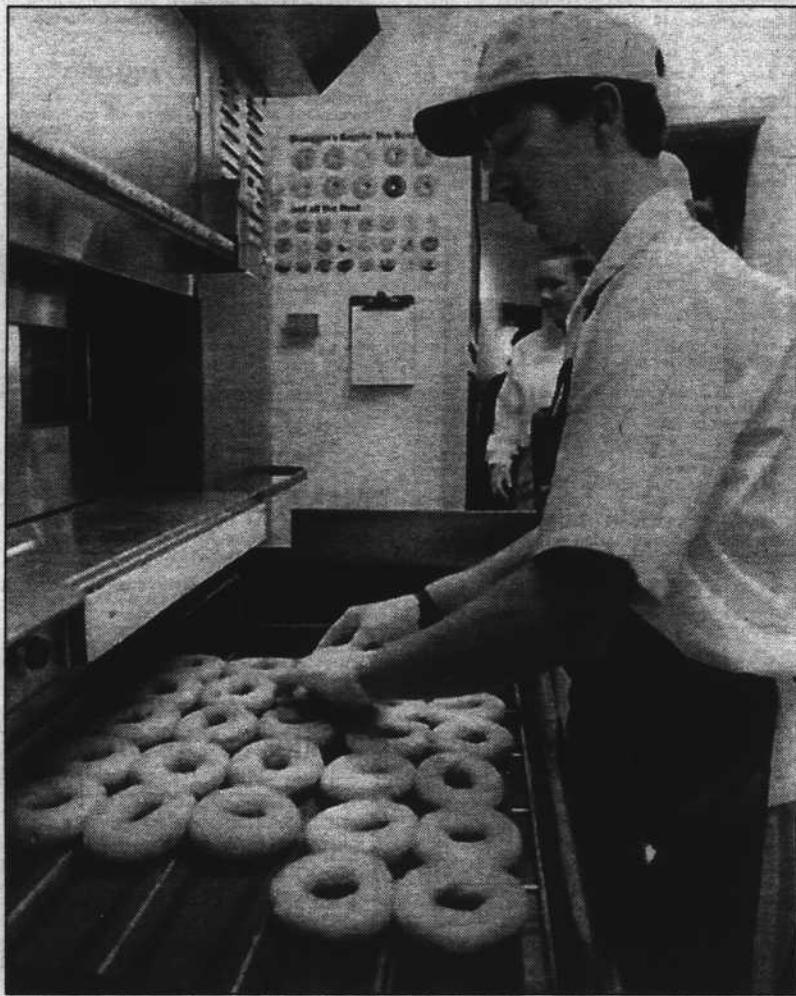

Upton said any bagels that weren't sold were either discounted and sold as day-olds, broken up for bagel bits for the soups or donated to places such as the City Mission.

"Right now, we're trying to set something up with the Salvation Army," Upton said.

One of the most popular bagel toppings — cream cheese — is offered in an abundant variety at Bruegger's, with 15 different kinds, none of which have more than seven grams of fat a serving.

Only nine different kinds are listed on their menu, but two of these are "Flavor of the Week" and "Fruit of the Month," which rotate regularly. Other toppings available include butter, margarine, jam, jelly and peanut butter.

For the hungry lunch crowd,

Tanna Kinnaman/DN

Chris Rankin sorts bagels before putting them into the oven at Bruegger's Bagel Bakery.

Bruegger's features several standard and vegetarian sandwiches, including hummus, grilled chicken salad and smoked salmon.

Also available are cups and bowls of soup — four kinds offered daily, 20 total — desserts (cookies and Bruegger Bars), and a variety of beverages, including fountain soda to hot mulled cider (in season) and juice spritzers.

I opted for rare roast beef (with dijon mustard, mayo, lettuce, onion and tomato) on a plain bagel (and a free pickle spear), a cup of Aztec Chicken soup, a medium Pepsi, and a Chewy Chocolate Chunk cookie. Total cost: $7.72; a little pricey for a lunch, but the quality and quantity made it worth the money.

My bagel sandwich was wonderful, although it was a bit harder than I had anticipated. But the inside was soft and warm, and the ingredients tasted fresh and delectable.

The soup was fabulous and had a definite kick to it, and my cookie was warm, soft and melt-in-your-mouth.

MUSIC REVIEWS

The Tea Party
"The Edges of Twilight"
EMI Records
Grade: A

The Tea Party is like a cross between The Sisters of Mercy and Led Zeppelin, with deep, doomy vocals and endless Kashmir-style riffs.

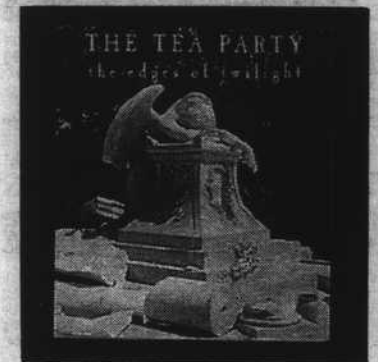

The fallen-angel photo on the CD cover and the cabalistic circles on the inside art would lead one to believe that this band poses gloom and nothing else. But that would be an inaccurate assumption. The Tea Party sets itself apart from its gothic pop vampire techno peers by employing a rare technique in the doom genre — subtlety.

The Tea Party does not hit the listener over the head with oppressive themes; most of the shock and aggression of this disc is implied rather than explicit. There is a fine line that this band walks between power riffs and classical musicianship. This subtle styling expands the range of moods and keeps the material fresh.

Silence certainly seems to be a theme for this band. Lines like "silent, knowing, always in time," "silence swimming in a pool of dreams" and "silent spirit walks before me" all give a sense of the emptiness that this band employs in contrast to its wall of sound. Silence juxtaposed with thunderous crescendos is the key to this album's majesty.

Silence and cacophony are also elements of the Indian music that The Tea Party delves into. Sitar, lyres, and hurdy gurdies join in with the electric guitars to create unique orchestral arrangements. Whereas many of the tracks sound more than a little like Page and Plants' Indian excursions, The Tea Party is very true to the Middle Eastern styles they employ.

Songs like "Fire in the Head" and "Sister Awake" take raga forms and twist and turn through endless variations like the serpentine Indian melodies they borrow from. Many of these tracks are quite long, but there is so much transition in the songs, so much light and dark intermixing, they never overstay their welcome.

The Tea Party is a group of excellent musicians, as testified by their mastery of many exotic instruments. The instrumental "The Badger" displays very moving and atmospheric, acoustic filigree with harmonic notes that ring out like chimes.

The Tea Party shows its Zeppelin inspiration when it dips into electric blues on "Turn the Lamp Down Low," with vocals that owe more to Robert Plant than Muddy Waters. The guitar stylings are not very authentic either, being more parts Jimmy Page than Elmore James. When the solemn intro gives way to heavy metal thump, no one can be very much surprised.

Another clue to The Tea Party's Zeppelin fixation is their collaboration with Roy Harper, longtime friend of Jimmy Page. Harper gives a spoken-word performance on a hidden song buried 14 minutes into the final track. Burying a hidden song into the album is almost to be expected from a band as mysterious and ethereal as The Tea Party.
