By Erin Schulte

Students frantic about finding a job this year can cool their heels, flip on their computers and surf to UNL Career Services' new site on the World Wide Web.

The home page (similar to a table of contents) links the user to pages with job vacancy listings, available internships and campus interview times.

Chris Timm, assistant director of Career Services, said that although Internet job hunting couldn't replace traditional methods, the job summaries provided could help narrow the field for more in-depth job-market research.

The home page includes further links to information about various companies, cities around the U.S. and their job markets, and how to write a compelling resume, Timm said.

As a further service to job-seeking students and companies, Career Services will begin putting students' resumes on the World Wide Web this year, Timm said.

Students registered with Career Services can write their own resume in HTML format and have it put on the home page. Those registered but unfamiliar with the Internet lingo can get started with monthly workshops.

But take heed. Timm said job and internship openings are updated frequently, but they are only brief outlines of what the job is about.

If a student is interested in a job, Timm said, it would be best to re-search it further.
