Chart-topping Black spurs audience

By Brian Sharp
Senior Editor

Clint Black is leaving here a better man, so to speak.

Black's single "One Emotion" reached the top of the charts Monday. The announcement turned last night's concert into a celebration—among almost 6,000 of Black's closest fans.

Concert Review

Camera flashes and spotlights ricocheted around the arena as Black and his eight-member band kicked off the night with "A Good Run of Bad Luck." Black and company kept the pace going throughout the hour-and-20-minute concert.

"It's more like a Saturday night than a Monday out there," Black told the screaming audience, taking a break from his music. "And that is good."

But Black came to party, and when the crowd wasn't lively enough for him, he let them know.

"If you all would've just spent a little more time in the beer garden, I know you could be louder than that," he yelled out, after calling for the crowd to sing along.

Black flashed his trademark grin throughout the night, kicking up his boots and working the crowd from the rotating stage on the Devaney Center floor.

At one point during the concert, a woman near the stage shouted admiration for Black's tight blue jeans.

"Thank you," he said, laughing. "They're my favorite pair."

Black took the stage at 8:19, following a half-hour set by Billy Montana—a young and upcoming star on the country music scene. Montana sat alone on stage, a lone singer with his acoustic guitar.

Black and company rolled through crowd favorites such as "No Time To Kill," "Leavin' Here a Better Man,"

"Killin' Time," "We Tell Ourselves," "Walkin' Away," and "Summer's Comin'."

But Black didn't let the night go by without paying tribute to a band which had a big influence on his musical career.

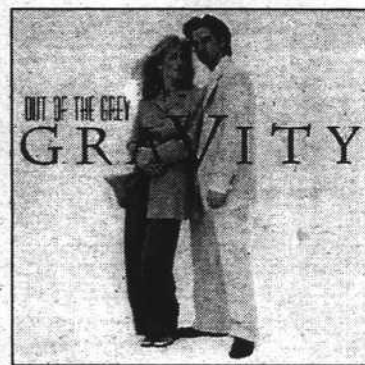

The stage stopped turning as the first bars of "Desperado" blended with the blue haze of spotlights. And the crowd, which had danced, clapped and sung along with Black throughout the night, fell silent and listened.

Black also previewed "A Change In the Air," a song he said would be the next single released off "One Emotion." The album is due out Oct. 4.

Black said his return to Lincoln and the rest of the tour was meant to be a departure from earlier tours.

"We wanted to do something on this tour that was more like our music was in the early days," he said. "Sort of like we were in your living room, minus the amps."

MUSIC REVIEWS

Out of the Grey "Gravity" Sparrow Grade: A

Out of the Grey has done it again. Close on the heels of their third album, "Diamond Days," the husband-and-wife duo of Christine and Scott Dente have generously put their all into their latest project, "Gravity."

Out of the Grey keeps getting better. On "Gravity," we find the same excellent songwriting that fans have come to expect, along with a fuller, more mature sound—both vocally and musically.

Scott Dente's skillful acoustic guitar playing is more prevalent and noticeable on this album. Christine Dente's singing is just as beautiful as it always has been, if not more so.

Christine and Scott Dente write almost all their own lyrics and seem to have a limitless stock of ideas to draw upon.

Lyrical, the highlight of the album is "So We Never Got to Paris." It's a carefree song about the joy found in marriage, despite sometimes having to put off one's dreams:

"So we never got to Paris/and found the cafe of our dreams/ but our table holds a whole world of memories/no, we never went to Venice/and strolled the streets alone/ but we built our worlds together and we got the best of both."

The duo's three other albums have always been encouraging and uplifting, and this one is no different. "Hope in Sight" takes the "best feel-good song" title for this album:

"I will look up/I will lift up my head and go on/I will call on the one who has carried me through/Will carry me until the end, there's hope/there's hope in sight."

No amount of writing can capture the sheer delight felt while listening to an Out of the Grey album.
